I do not want to belabor the point. I am struck by the fact we would drop provisions which have been almost universally supported in this Chamber even prior to 9/11, the need for additional personnel on the ground to provide assistance to local communities through grant applications. To give an idea of the pent-up need, when we originally authored the FIRE Act which was to provide grant moneys to local departments, the 33,000 around the country, paid, volunteer, or combination departments, there was $100 million put into the budget to provide grants to local communities. In excess of $3 billion in applications in the first year came to FEMA because of the pent-up need that exists across the country for additional equipment, and to provide additional personnel, additional training, so firefighters can respond.

Most Americans today are aware, obviously, that the role of firefighters and EMS services are vastly different than even a few years ago. Today, firefighters are called upon to respond to situations where highly toxic chemical materials are involved. The degree of sophistication to be brought to the trade of firefighters is so much more complicated than before, as the demands have increased dramatically. When we speak of volunteer departments, for instance, we rely on the good will and the spirit of volunteerism. In many of our rural and local communities, people volunteer to serve. Yet today they are called upon to respond to very complicated and dangerous situations.

There was an overwhelming degree of support when Senator WARNER and Senator LEVIN took the bill that Senator DEWINE, myself, and others fashioned and included as part of the Defense authorization bill. Then, of course, the appropriations were forthcoming and the demand was evident. After 9/11, the demand increased dramatically as a result of the new threats of terrorism.

I am deeply troubled and saddened that we are talking about homeland security and yet there is nothing in this bill, nothing, that provides one red penny to hire first responders of terrorist attacks. How ludicrous is that? We are talking about a homeland security bill and we have nothing in here to go to local police, fire, and EMS services, and we will call this a homeland security bill. The great irony, as our colleague from New York pointed out, is there are provisions in this bill to protect the pharmaceutical industries from lawsuits where vaccines are developed for kids. How do you explain that to the American public? We sneak provisions in this bill to protect corporate America, yet we will not provide money to those who are called upon to respond, God forbid, if another terrorist attack occurs. How do you explain that to the American public?

Under these procedures we are dealing with—and it gets confusing even for those who have been here a while with post cloture and other procedural roadblocks—I am probably not going to get a vote on this amendment dealing with the firefighters. I probably should not waste the time to bring it up, but people ought to know that while people go around and beat their chest about homeland security in this bill, you should not be deluded by the name. The name may sound pretty good, but underneath it are a lot of problems. There are things that are in this bill that have nothing to do with homeland security, and there are things that should be in here that are not. These firefighters need our help and support and backing.

I regret I was not able to include the problem dealing with law enforcement, an amendment which has—I will not bother listing everyone here, I will include these names for the Record—a broad-based constituency here of some 30 Members of this Chamber who have supported this bill, S. 2770: Senator BAUCUS, Senator BIDEN, Senator SNOWE, Senator DEWINE, Senator DURBIN, Senator COLLINS, Senator CORZINE, Senator SCHUMER, Senator MURRAY, Senator WARNER—the list goes on here, of our colleagues who have supported this law enforcement provision that I mentioned earlier about the great disparity in pay. We are losing these people.

I am not allowed under the procedures to offer that amendment now. I will try to find a chance to do it in the next few days, at least to make an effort to have it as part of this bill. Again, I have a very strong letter from the law enforcement agents, asking for some assistance here.

I don't know how you explain to people what we are doing in homeland security as law enforcement and firefighters here are basically going to be left out of this bill. I regret that is the case.

I am faced now with this particular second-degree amendment, and we will see what happens over the next day or so and whether or not we can actually get a vote on it, but I wanted to take a few minutes to explain my concerns about it.

Earlier this year, of course, we had adopted funding for the FIRE Act as a separate appropriation. It was not vetoed, but it was tantamount to a veto. It was what we call sequestered by the President. He took those moneys and basically said I am not going to sign this into law. So the grant money for communities in Rhode Island and New Jersey and Michigan—all across the country—who were looking for us to be a partner in getting better prepared to deal with the threats of terrorism, I am sorry to tell you, are not included in here. I don't know who you are including in homeland security, but you are not part of the deal. Apparently the pharmaceutical industry is, but we are not. We will try our best in the next few days to rectify this, but under the rules and procedures I don't think it is going to happen, I am sad to report. Maybe we can try in the next Congress.

But I am saddened we are passing a homeland security bill and firefighters and law enforcement officials are not going to be a part of this effort, at least as far as these amendments are concerned.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, first I thank the Senator from Connecticut for his eloquent remarks. I could not agree with him more.

When we look at this bill, a bill that I fully want to support—I support setting up a Department of Homeland Security and the goals involved, and have supported moving this forward. But as we look at the details of what has been given to us from the House, it is unbelievable. When we look at first responders, people in Michigan on the front lines on the ground—not only police and firefighters and EMS but our Border Patrol who are working double time and triple time, and those from local law enforcement who have been assigned—we have been trying to provide some reimbursement for, their overtime and the costs to local units of government. It is amazing to me that in the name of homeland security we have a bill in front of us that does not include many things that are critical to our security in this country but that includes items, frankly, that are outrageous special interest items that are being stuck in the bill, hoping we will not notice.

We all are concerned about homeland security and want to move forward together to put together the strongest safety and security for our citizens. I want to speak to one of those today that colleagues have already spoken to that is a provision, unfortunately, in this bill, that protects the financial security of the pharmaceutical industry, not the homeland security of the people of America. This provision I find absolutely outrageous and I intend to support the Lieberman amendment to withdraw this from the bill.

The homeland security bill contains a provision that will expand the liability protections that currently exist for vaccines to include other components such as vaccine preservatives like thimerosal. This was included in the bill with no debate, no committees.

How many times have we heard on this floor as we were debating so many bills—I remember on prescription drugs—we heard over and over again that we should not be adding important provisions that would lower the prices of prescription drugs because, colleagues on the other side of the aisle were saying, we had not gone through the regular legislative process. We had not had hearings. There had not been votes in committees.

Yet now, in the 11th hour of the session of this Congress, we see a provision added that nobody has looked at other than a few people, I would argue, operating on behalf of one of literally the strongest special interests in this country today.

There are six drug company lobbyists for every one Member of the Senate. They certainly have earned their pay on this bill.

When we look at this particular provision and we look at the fact that we have an industry that has stopped a bill that we sent to the House, S. 812, that was a bipartisan bill to create more competition for the industry through generics, opening the border to Canada, giving States the ability to negotiate on behalf of the uninsured, a bill that would lower prescription prices today, immediately when passed—they are successful in killing that bill that passed last July in the Senate. Yet they are able to place a provision in the homeland security bill that will virtually exempt from liability a company that is making a product over which there is great concern as it relates to the safety of children.

Thimerosal, which is manufactured by Eli Lilly and Company, is the subject of several class action lawsuits based on increasing research connecting this preservative, which contains mercury, to the rising incidence of autism in children. Just this weekend the New York Times ran a very comprehensive six-page story about the growing body of evidence connecting thimerosal with autism and other developmental disorders in children. While the research is far from conclusive, is this narrowly written special interest provision, unrelated to homeland security, the way to respond to concerns that relate to this issue and concerns about mercury as it relates to vaccines and additives and the whole question of autism in children and what contributes to it? Is this the way to do that?

Don't children and their families merit the full protection under the law and due process to be able to sort through some very serious issues and to allow the courts to work their will, looking at the evidence? The provision in this homeland security bill, brought to us from the House of Representatives, would severely limit parents' ability to get justice for their children. How is that homeland security?

The provisions include vaccine components in the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program. It is a program in which awards are given and they are limited to funds available through a special trust fund so liability is limited. Instead, it is a no-fault system. That would now include vaccine components, which is a far broader definition than vaccines.

In 1988, Congress enacted the National Vaccine Injury Compensation Program as a no-fault alternative to the tort system for resolving claims resulting from adverse reactions to mandated childhood vaccines. This Federal no-fault system is designed to compensate individuals or families of individuals who have been injured by childhood vaccinations, whether administered in the public or private sector. Damages are awarded out of a trust fund that is financed by excise taxes of 75 cents per dose imposed on each vaccine covered under the program.

This bill seems to be protecting the financial interests of a company, Eli Lilly, rather than the taxpayers who will now see, through this fund, a greater subsidy, and families and children across this country.

What I find particularly disturbing is we are looking at a company whose CEO is in the top five for compensation with $4.3 million in compensation last year and unexercised stock options valued at $46 million in the year 2001. A 2001 study of the top 50 drugs marketed to seniors shows that Eli Lilly and Company posted $115 billion in revenue. I do not in any way object to successful business, although I guess in this case I would say given the inability of people to receive medicines, I find that kind of salary and others across the industry disturbing.

But what I am particularly concerned about is that a company which is so successful, an industry that is the most successful in the country, and highly subsidized by taxpayers, would now be in a situation to protect themselves from liability, and to jeopardize families and children who are asking that their case be heard about potential threats of mercury placed into vaccines and the possible connections to autism.

The protection in this bill is included for an industry that gets a higher return on its revenue than any other industry in this country, or in the world. If we are looking at protection, certainly we ought not to be adding another subsidy to an industry that is so heavily subsidized by all of us now—highly subsidized. And, yet, most people, many people in this country cannot afford the product they make.

I support the Lieberman amendment to strike this provision. This provision does not belong in the homeland security bill. This provision should go through the process of hearings so both sides can be heard. We also have a court process going on that we need to respect and allow to continue.

I am hopeful my colleagues will join with us to exempt this provision from the bill so we can in fact focus on homeland security, and not a very clear special interest provision put in by an industry that already receives many special provisions.

An issue as serious as potential mercury poisoning of children certainly deserves serious deliberation and deserves the full legislative process.

Let me say again that colleagues earlier this year on the Medicare prescription drug bill—on our generic bill as well as on many other bills—have come to the floor from the other side of the aisle expressing concern about issues that had not gone through committee. If this is a serious issue—and I believe it is a very serious issue—doesn't it merit that same high standard? Subsidizing Eli Lilly and taking away the ability of families to recover from liability because of potential mercury poisoning of their children does not belong in this homeland security bill. I find it shameful that it was put in.

I hope my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will join with us to remove this provision.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may I say to the distinguished Senator from Michigan, Senator STABENOW, that I have listened to what she has said. I am not surprised by what she has indicated that she has found in this reservation. I think it supports my viewpoint; namely, that we ought not vote on cloture tomorrow on this bill—cloture at some point, undoubtedly. But I hope we don't vote for it tomorrow. This bill needs further scrutiny. It needs a microscope upon it. We need to study it. We need to know what is in this bill which has suddenly been foisted upon us within the last 48 hours—a new bill.

There are those who maintain we have been on this subject matter for 5, 6, or 8 weeks, or more. That is one thing. But we haven't been on this bill. This is a new bill. Senator STABENOW is talking about provisions that are in this bill that haven't seen the light of day before. These are new and disturbing. And yet we are being asked on tomorrow to apply cloture to shut off debate so there can only be 30 hours remaining for debate on this bill.

I hope Senators will listen to Senator STABENOW. I hope they will not vote for cloture tomorrow. We ought to do our duty. Our duty is to stay on this bill until the American people know what is in it, and so we Senators know what is in it. There are 484 pages in this bill which just came to light on yesterday. It is a new bill. There are some provisions in it that have been in other bills that have been discussed in the Senate earlier in the fall and in the summer. But there are many provisions in this bill that are absolutely new. We really do not know what else is in the bill. Things are being discovered as we go along. But who knows what else is in the bill?

I compliment the distinguished Senator from Michigan, a Senator who is absolutely able and always dedicated, always serving her constituents and the people of this country, who has a fine mind, and who is a tremendous legislator. I have so much admiration for her. I sit with her on the Budget Committee. And what she has said with respect to this particular bill I think we should hear. We should listen to her. I hope Senators will not vote for cloture on tomorrow.

Is there anything the distinguished Senator wishes to add?

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to yield to the Senator without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, first of all, I thank the Senator for his kind words. Second, I simply say, as Senator BYRD has said so many times on the floor, we need to look at details. We need to know what is in this bill. It is a different bill that came back. I was deeply disturbed as I looked through it. I want to support homeland security. I support developing a department. We all share that. This is not a partisan issue. We want to have maximum safety, security and ability, communicate it effectively and efficiently, and create the kind of confidence people expect us to create in terms of the ability to respond and ideally prevent attacks. But my fear is that under the name of homeland security we are saying special interest provisions are put in this bill which are outrageous and should not have the light of day. I think it is our responsibility to shine the light of day on those provisions.

I thank the Senator from West Virginia. I appreciate his good work.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator. She has performed a tremendous service. I congratulate her, and I again thank her.

Mr. President, we hear this is a compromise bill. It is a compromise, all right. It is a compromise in many ways. It is a compromise of our civil liberties. It is a compromise of our separation of powers. It is a compromise of our checks and balances. It is a compromise of workers' rights. There are many compromises in this bill.

To express it as a compromise is a term that is often used around here in the legislative halls. Legislation is the art of compromise. We often compromise on legislation. Compromise on legislation is a series of compromises among Republicans and Democrats, and among committees. But, in this sense, this is a far different animal we have here. By passing this legislation, we are all complicit in a giant hoax. This is the worst kind of game playing possible in trying to foist this Department onto the American people as a substitute for real action on homeland security.

This Congress and this administration are both being irresponsible. Instead of providing the American people with real security, we are offering them a placebo, a sugar pill that will not protect them and will not make them safer, not by even the slightest measurement.

There will be an uncertain sound of the trumpet. And when I refer to the "uncertain sound of the trumpet," let me refer more specifically to the Book of 1st Corinthians, the 14th chapter. And I read from the 8th verse:

> For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

Mr. President, Congress is about to give an uncertain sound to the American people. Based on what we shall all too soon, I am afraid, pass as a homeland security bill, they are going to feel more secure. They will not be. They are going to feel that Congress has enacted legislation that will make their homes safer, make their schools safer, make their communities safer, make them safer on the jobs. This legislation will not make jobs or schools or homes or communities one whit safer, not one whit safer.

The same people who will be employed in implementing the homeland security legislation to make the people safe are out there now, right this minute. They are on the northern border. They are on the southern border. They are in the ports of this country. They are in the hospitals. They are in the fire departments. They are in the law enforcement agencies. They are in the FBI. They are in Customs. They are already out there now. And tonight, at midnight, when you and I are in our beds and on our pillows, they will be out there.

We are not waiting until this bill passes for them to be out there. They have been out there for weeks and months. They have been doing a good job with what they have had placed in their hands by way of resources that they could use.

We saw the FBI arrest the persons in the cell in New York. The FBI was on the job. The FBI did not wait for this legislation to pass this Senate or the House and be sent down to the President and signed. The FBI was on the job.

People are not going to be one whit safer with the passage of this bill. They are going to feel a lot safer because we are trying to make them believe they are going to be safer. We are trying to make the American people believe that with the passage of this bill—and the administration is complicit, absolutely complicit in this.

The President himself has been out there all throughout the land, especially during the campaign, raising money for campaign purposes for electing their candidates, and all the while they have been with a nice backdrop of American Marines or soldiers or airmen, or whatever, but a patriotic backdrop, trying to make the American people believe that with the passage of this—if the Congress would only pass this homeland security bill, they, the people out there in the plains, in the mountains, in the valleys, on the prairies, will all be safer. They will not be 10 cents safer, Mr. President. They might be even less safe because in the next year, during which time these various and sundry agencies are going to be phased into this new Department of Homeland Security, during that time there is going to be chaos in a lot of these agencies. They will be moving phones, moving desks, moving chairs, trying to get accustomed to the new visions, the new objectives, and the people themselves are going to be less secure.

So we are offering the American people a placebo, a sugar pill. It is a political pill. It will not make the people safer.

We ought to be taking real action to protect lives now. Sadly, we are walking away from that responsibility. I only pray our irresponsibility does not result in lost lives.

Now, this is not how the American people expect this Congress to operate. When we were Members of the House of Representatives, or earlier than that, perhaps, or at some point, we have sent out letters, we have sent out booklets, telling the young people in this country—we tell these young pages up here—how your laws are made.

I remember years ago, when I was in the House of Representatives, sending out a little booklet to the people in my then-congressional district of how our laws are made. It is a joke.

We tell our young people that, first of all, a bill is offered by a Member of the Senate or the House. That bill is referred to a committee. And at a certain date, at a certain time, the chairman of that committee will have his committee called together, and he will place the bill before the committee for its consideration. And the members on both sides of the tables in that particular committee which has jurisdiction over that particular legislation will debate it back and forth, and they will offer amendments in the committee. They will talk about the bill. They will have their staffs seated around them. They will have good discussions of this bill that has been introduced by the legislature. Then the bill will be amended, perhaps, or, perhaps, in any event, it will finally be reported by the committee to the Senate or to the House for action. There it will be placed on the calendar.

Sometimes these beautifully written pieces on how our laws are made are illustrated by cartoons. We have all seen those cartoons. We then see that the bill is off to the Senate, and it is placed upon the calendar. And at some point in time, the majority leader or a Member, according to those cartoons, will call up the bill, and then will ensue a debate, a heated debate, Republicans on one side, Democrats on the other. And they will all work together. They will offer amendments again, and they will have a heated debate. They will answer questions. The witnesses, which first appeared in committees and testified on the bills, may then be seated in the galleries listening to the debate as it goes forward in the Senate and in the House.

After a while, then, after they amend, after that bill is appropriately amended, it finally reaches a vote, and it is passed by that body.

Then, according to the booklet on how our laws are made, that bill then goes to the other body. If it originated in the Senate, it goes to the House. If it originated in the House, after going through the workings of the committees, and so forth, and the debate on the floor, after its passage, it is sent over to the Senate. It goes through the same procedure then in the other body, where it is amended. And if there are differences in the House bill and the Senate bill, the bill is sent to a conference made up of Members of the two bodies, and the areas that are not in agreement will be worked on in the conference between the representatives of the two legislative bodies. Agreement will finally be reached as to every difference that was to be found between the two bodies. So all those differences will be resolved.

Then the conference report will be brought back to the House and brought back to the Senate and brought up at the appropriate time by the managers of the legislation on whatever committee had jurisdiction over the legislation, and then conference reports are brought up. Conference reports are debated, and they are agreed upon in both Houses.

Off goes the bill which is now an act. It goes by special messenger down to the President of the United States. It appears on his desk where he may sign it or he may veto it.

So we all remember how those laws are made according to the script as prepared there in those handsome little booklets that we send out.

That is how the American people expect this Congress to operate. That is the way we are supposed to operate. But the way this bill was brought in here,. less than 48 hours ago, a brandnew bill. It had not been before any committee. It had undergone no hearings, not this bill. It is a bill on our desks that has 484 pages. There are 484 pages in this bill. It has not been before any committee. There have been no hearings on this bill. There have been no witnesses who were asked to appear to testify on behalf of the bill or in opposition to it. It did not undergo any such scrutiny. It was just placed on the Senate Calendar. It was offered as an amendment here. And so here it is before the Senate now. There it is.

That is not the way in which our children are taught how we make our laws—not at all. The American people expect us to provide our best judgment and our best insight into such monumental decisions. This is a far, far cry from being our best. This is not our best. As a matter of fact, it is a mere shadow of our best. Yet we are being asked, as the elected representatives of the American people, those of us who are sent here by our respective States are being asked on tomorrow to invoke cloture on these 484 pages.

If I had to go before the bar of judgment tomorrow and were asked by the eternal God what is in this bill, I could not answer God. If I were asked by the people of West Virginia, Senator BYRD, what is in that bill, I could not answer. I could not tell the people of West Virginia what is in this bill. There are a few things that I know are in it by virtue of the fact that I have had 48 hours, sleeping time included, in which to study this monstrosity, 484 pages.

If there ever were a monstrosity, this is it. I hold it in my hand, a monstrosity. I don't know what is in it. I know a few things that are in it, and a few things that I know are in it that I don't think the American people would approve of if they knew what was in there. Even Senator LIEBERMAN, who is chairman of the committee which has jurisdiction over this subject matter, even he saw new provisions in this legislation as he looked through it yesterday and today. As his staff looked through it, they saw provisions they had not seen before, that they had not discussed before, that had not been before their committee before.

Yet we are being asked on tomorrow to invoke cloture on that which means we are not going to debate in the normal course of things. We are going to have 30 hours of debate. That is it, 30 hours. That is all, 30 hours; 100 Senators, 30 hours of debate. And this is one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation I have seen in my 50 years.

I will have been in Congress 50 years come January 3. God help me to reach that date of January 3, 2003, the year of our Lord. In my 50 years here, that is the most far-reaching, certainly one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation that I have seen in my 50 years. I have been on this Hill longer than anybody else in this Capitol on either side of the aisle in either body. In both bodies, I am the only person, 50 years. I have been here longer than all of you, staff people, Members, Members' wives. Take it or leave it, ROBERT BYRD has been here longer than anybody else—the security personnel, any policemen, whatever you call it, pull them out here, nobody, nobody in the House. JOHN DINGELL, he is the dean of the House; I served with his father in the House.

Never have I seen such a monstrous piece of legislation sent to this body. And we are being asked to vote on that 484 pages tomorrow. Our poor staffs were up most of the night studying it. They know some of the things that are in there, but they don't know all of them. It is a sham and it is a shame. We are all complicit in going along with it.

I read in the paper that nobody will have the courage to vote against it. Well, ROBERT BYRD is going to vote against it because I don't know what I am voting for. That is one thing. And No. 2, it has not had the scrutiny that we tell our young people, that we tell these sweet pages here, boys and girls who come up here, we tell them our laws should have.

Listen, my friends: I am an old meatcutter. I used to make sausage. Let me tell you, I never made sausage like this thing was made. You don't know what is in it. At least I knew what was in the sausage. I don't know what is in this bill. I am not going to vote for it when I don't know what is in it.

I trust that people tomorrow will turn thumbs down on that motion to invoke cloture. It is our duty. We ought to demand that this piece of legislation stay around here a while so we can study it, so our staffs can study it, so we know what is in it, so we can have an opportunity to amend it where it needs amending.

Several Senators have indicated, Senator LIEBERMAN among them, that there are areas in here that ought to be amended.

What the people of the United States really care about is their security. That is what we are talking about.

We don't know when another tragic event is going to be visited upon this country. It can be this evening, it can be tomorrow, or whatever. But this legislation is not going to be worth a continental dime if it happens tonight, tomorrow, a month from tomorrow; it is not going to be worth a dime. There are people out there working now to secure this country and the people. They are the same people who are already on the payroll. They are doing their duty right now to secure this country.

This is a hoax. This is a hoax. To tell the American people they are going to be safer when we pass this is to hoax. We ought to tell the people the truth. They are not going to be any safer with that. That is not the truth. I was one of the first in the Senate to say we need a new Department of Homeland Security. I meant that. But I didn't mean this particular hoax that this administration is trying to pander off to the American people, telling them this is homeland security. That is not homeland security.

Mr. President, the Attorney General and Director of Homeland Security have told Americans repeatedly there is an imminent risk of another terrorist attack. Just within the past day, or few hours, the FBI has put hospitals in the Washington area, Houston, San Francisco, and Chicago on notice of a possible terrorist threat. This bill does nothing—not a thing—to make our citizens more secure today or tomorrow. This bill does not even go into effect for up to 12 months. It will be 12 months before this goes into effect. The bill just moves around on an organizational chart. That is what it does—moves around on an organizational chart.

Mr. President, do you really believe Osama bin Laden cares whether the associate commissioner for border enforcement will have his title changed to the Assistant Secretary of the Bureau of Border Security? Will that make any difference to Osama bin Laden? Do you think the al-Qaida organization cares one whit whether that Assistant Secretary works for the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service or for the new Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security? No. Osama bin Laden doesn't give a whit what his title is going to be. The al-Qaida doesn't care about that. They are tickled to sit back and watch us be fooled into complacency by virtue of our passing this piece of trash.

That is not to say there are not some parts of the bill that are good. This whole thing is being rushed through, and we are all being pressured to pass it, vote for cloture. Let's get out of here. We have to go home, let's go. Let's get this thing out of the way. What Osama bin Laden would care about is whether there are more security guards, better detection equipment at our ports and airports. What Osama bin Laden would care about is whether we have enough border patrol agents to capture his terrorists as they try to enter this country. What Osama bin Laden would care about is whether we have sufficient security at our nuclear powerplants to deter his efforts to steal nuclear material or blow up a nuclear facility.

The Senate Appropriations Committee, on which Senator STEVENS and I sit, along with 27 other Senators, including the distinguished Senator who presides over the Chamber at this moment, the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. REED, tried to provide funds to programs to hire more FBI agents, to hire more border patrol agents, to equip and train our first responders, to improve security at our nuclear powerplants, to improve bomb detection at our airports. That committee of 29 Senators—15 Democrats and 14 Republicans—voted to provide the funds for these homeland security needs. Those funds have been in bills that have been out there for 4 months. This administration, right down here at the other end of the avenue, has had its leaders over in the Republican-controlled House sitting on those bills. The chairman in the Appropriations Committee in the House saw the need for these bills. He tried to get the leadership in the House to take the cuffs off his hands and wrists and let him go forward with these appropriations bills. The answer was no. So the money has been there. All that needed to be done, all we needed in order to release those funds—I can remember in one bill we had $2.5 billion in homeland security funds. All the President had to do was sign his name to the effect that this was an emergency. That money would have flowed; it would have been out there now—not next week, not next year, but now it would have been out there.

Various people at the local level—the firemen, the policemen, people on the borders, border patrol, people in the ports, securing the ports, people at the airports that help the emergency personnel—all of these people would have had the advantage of that money flowing immediately for homeland security.

But the President said no—no, he would not sign it. President Bush is the man I am talking about. He would not sign that as an emergency. These moneys have been reported by a unanimous Appropriations Committee. But this administration said no. So that is what happened. These are actions that would make America more secure today. Did the President help us to approve these funds? No. Instead, the President forced us—forced us—to reduce homeland security funding by $8.9 billion, and he delayed another $5 billion.

This is shameful; this is cynical; this is being irresponsible. It is unfair to the American people. And then to tell them Congress ought to pass that homeland security bill—that is passing the buck.

Mr. President, I call attention to a column in the New York Times. This is entitled "You Are A Suspect." It is by William Safire. I will read it:

> If the homeland security act is not amended before passage, here is what will happen to you:

Listen, Senators. This is what William Safire is saying in the New York Times of November 14, 2002. That is today. This is what the New York Times is saying to you, to me, to us:

> If the Homeland Security Act is not amended before passage, here is what will happen to you:
>
> Every purchase you make—

Hear me now—

> Every purchase you make with a credit card, every magazine subscription you buy and medical prescription you fill, every Web site you visit and e-mail you send or receive, every academic grade you receive, every bank deposit you make, every trip you book and every event you attend—all these transactions and communications will go into what the Defense Department describes as "a virtual, centralized grand database."
>
> To this computerized dossier on your private life from commercial sources, add every piece of information that government has about you—passport application, driver's license and bridge toll records, judicial and divorce records, complaints from nosy neighbors to the F.B.I., your lifetime paper trail plus the latest hidden camera surveillance—and you have the supersnoop's dream: a "Total Information Awareness' about every U.S. citizen.

Every U.S. citizen, and that is you, that is you, that is you, that is you, that is you.

> This is not some far-out Orwellian scenario. It is what will happen to your personal freedom in the next few weeks if John Poindexter gets the unprecedented power he seeks.
>
> Remember Poindexter? Brilliant man, first in his class at the Naval Academy, later earned a doctorate in physics, rose to national security adviser under President Ronald Reagan. He had this brilliant idea of secretly selling missiles to Iran to pay ransom for hostages, and with the illicit proceeds to illegally support Contras in Nicaragua.
>
> A jury convicted Poindexter in 1990 on five felony counts of misleading Congress and making false statements, but an appeals court overturned the verdict because Congress had given him immunity for his testimony. He famously asserted, "The buck stops here," arguing that the White House staff, and not the president, was responsible for fateful decisions that might prove embarrassing.
>
> This ring-knocking master of deceit is back again with a plan even more scandalous than Iran-Contra. He heads the "Information Awareness Office" in the otherwise excellent Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency, which spawned the Internet and stealth aircraft technology. Poindexter is now realizing his 20-year dream: getting the "data-mining" power to snoop on every public and private act of every American.
>
> Even the hastily passed U.S.A. Patriot Act, which widened the scope of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act and weakened 15 privacy laws, raised requirements for the government to report secret eavesdropping to Congress and the courts. But Poindexter's assault on individual privacy rides roughshod over such oversight.
>
> He is determined to break down the wall between commercial snooping and secret government intrusion. The disgraced admiral dismisses such necessary differentiation as bureaucratic "stovepiping." And he has been given a $200 million budget to create computer dossiers on 300 million Americans.
>
> When George W. Bush was running for president, he stood foursquare in defense of each person's medical, financial and communications privacy. But Poindexter, whose contempt for the restraints of oversight drew the Reagan administration into its most serious blunder, is still operating on the presumption that on such a sweeping theft of privacy rights, the buck ends with him and not with the president.

This time, however, he has been seizing power in the open. In the past week John Markoff of The Times, followed by Robert O'Harrow of The Washington Post, have revealed the extent of Poindexter's operation, but editorialists have not grasped its undermining of the Freedom of Information Act.

Political awareness can overcome "Total Information Awareness," the combined force of commercial and government snooping. In a similar overreach, Attorney General Ashcroft tried his Terrorism Information and Prevention System (TIPS), but public outrage at the use of gossips and postal workers as snoops caused the House to shoot it down. The Senate should now do the same to this other exploitation of fear.

The Latin motto over Poindexter's new Pentagon office reads "Scientia Est Potentia"—"knowledge is power." Exactly: the government's infinite knowledge about you is its power over you. "We're just as concerned as the next person with protecting privacy," this brilliant mind blandly assured The Post. A jury found he spoke falsely before.

If the American people, if the American public is to believe what they read in this week's newspapers, the Congress stands ready to pass legislation to create a new Department of Homeland Security. Not with my vote. Passage of such legislation would be the answer to the universal battle cry that this administration adopted shortly after the September 11 attacks: Reorganize the Federal Government.

How is it that the Bush administration's No. 1 priority has evolved into a plan to create a giant, huge bureaucracy? How is it that the Congress bought into the belief that to take a plethora of Federal agencies and departments and shuffle them around would make us safer from future terrorist attacks?

Osama bin Laden is still alive and plotting more attacks while we play bureaucratic shuffle board after we have already spent about $20 billion in Afghanistan to capture or to obliterate Osama bin Laden. He has surfaced on audio tapes boasting about how he is plotting additional terrorist attacks against the United States. Yet our only response is to reorganize the Federal Government. That is our only response, reorganize the Federal Government.

Right here it is, 484 pages of it, reorganizing the Federal Government. Am I missing something here?

Eleven of the thirteen appropriations bills have not yet been passed. Together they contain over $25.6 billion in funds to improve our homeland defense. That is money to hire additional border security personnel. That is money to purchase equipment at our seaports and airports to inspect packages for weapons of mass destruction. That is money for protection against cyber-attacks. That is money to protect our nuclear facilities, not a year from now but now. That is money to assist local police, local firefighters, local health care workers in case of additional terrorist attacks.

Yet the administration is refusing to allocate this money, refusing to turn on the spigot and let it flow, let it roll.

This is real money to improve America's safety, but instead of pushing for these resources, the administration's top and seemingly only priority is a bureaucratic reshuffling of agencies. So this administration will continue holding up the money needed to protect Americans—your children, your grandchildren, your wife, your in-laws, your friends—at home and it will be allowed to do so because it will have this flimsy 484 pages of legislation to cover its political backside.

The design of this hulking bureaucracy has been the administration's focus for the past several months. That is where it wanted Congress to focus its attention. That is where the administration wanted the American people to focus, not on providing real homeland security but, rather, on playing bureaucratic shuffle board.

We have witnessed a great show. We have been told that if only we pass this 484 pages of legislation—this political hoax that I hold in my hand, that many of us have not seen before yesterday—the American people have been told that if only we pass this legislation, all would be well.

But like the great and powerful Wizard of Oz, with his terrifying smoke, flames and roar, the reality of this too-good-to-be-true proposal will eventually be unveiled.

Mr. President, my concerns about this legislation and its several iterations are many. It gives the President too much unchecked authority. It gives the Secretary of the new Department too much unchecked authority. It makes massive changes in Government structure with little scrutiny, and it allows those changes to be made without the approval of the Congress.

It threatens changes to worker protections that could have enormous and detrimental effects. It extends the cloak of secrecy that has been a hallmark of this White House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). The Senator will suspend. Senators will kindly take their conversations off the floor.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, this legislation not only cuts the Congress out of the loop, it also includes provisions to keep the people and the press—and the press had better take notice—it includes provisions to keep the people and the press, the members of the fourth estate, in the dark.

I don't think the media realize this about this bill. And the media has apparently swallowed the line that this is a compromise. It is more than that. It is a compromise of our personal liberties. It is a compromise of the privacy rights of our people. It is a compromise of the checks and balances. It is a compromise of the separation of powers. It is a compromise of the American people's right to know—the American people's right to know. It is a compromise of that.

For those who do not understand what I am saying, they should get this bill, 484 pages of it. It is a new bill. It did not exist anywhere until yesterday.

We have talked about how this whole idea of a Homeland Security Department, presented to us by this administration, we have talked about how it was hatched in secrecy in the bowels of the White House, how it was hatched in secrecy, cooked up by four different persons in the White House. I have named them earlier today: Mr. Card, Mr. Gonzales, Mr. Mitch Daniels, and Mr. Ridge. No disrespect to any of them—they are all fine people; they are all fine public servants—but they are not anything extraordinary, I would say that, insofar as people go. They hatched this thing. They hatched it in secrecy.

We understand from the newspapers this was talked about among the people in the administration, down in the secrecy of the White House. It had been talked about. It had been developed. And then it sprang forth like Minerva from the forehead of Jove, fully clothed, fully armed. There it was.

We could say the same thing about this bill that we are passing here. We have little right to complain about the White House and about the way in which it developed in secrecy this whole egg that was hatched and sprung upon us as the homeland security bill.

We have done the same thing right here. This was concocted in secrecy in the darkness of the night. It didn't see the light of day until yesterday—484 pages. We are expected to pass this. We are expected to invoke cloture on it tomorrow and pass it and tell the American people they are safer after the passage of that monstrosity.

No doubt there are some good things about that bill. There are some good things in it. Some of the provisions in this 484-page bill have come out of Senator LIEBERMAN's committee's deliberations, and it passed. Some of these have been discussed before, but not all of them. There are a lot of provisions in this bill that had not seen the light of day until yesterday.

The press has been kept in the dark. The press is going to realize all too late what has happened to the people's right to know that we were going to pass right here in this bill. I am going to address those provisions briefly in a few minutes. I hope the press will stay tuned because I want to point out to the press what is about to happen to the people's right to know.

I have often had my differences with reporters, but I am a firm believer in the freedom of the press and in the responsibilities of the fourth estate. If the Congress is going to so willingly blindfold itself to the inner workings of this administration and this new bureaucracy, I hope the press will not be so compliant. Hear me, those in the fourth estate. You stay tuned. I will point out part of this bill in a few minutes. But if you haven't read it as yet, it is going to turn your stomach because you believe in the people's right to know. I hope it will keep a watchful eye. I am talking about the media. I hope the media will keep a watchful eye on this new agency. Unfortunately, provisions contained in this bill will make it harder for the fourth estate—harder for you in the press—and harder for the people to do so.

I still find it difficult to believe that the American war on terrorism hinges on the building of a new, huge bureaucracy. Our plan to eradicate a vicious, cunning nest of vipers is to reorganize the Government.

I have read much about Senator BYRD and whether or not he would filibuster this bill. If I thought for a moment I could kill this bill here tonight by filibustering it, I would do it. But there are a lot of Senators here who wouldn't know a filibuster—a lot of people who wouldn't know a filibuster—if they met one on the way home. There are a lot of people who wouldn't know it if they met it in the middle of the road.

I intend to stand on my feet and try to expose some of the things in this bill that are not going to be good for the American people and which will not contribute to their safety.

Our plan to eradicate a vicious, cunning nest of vipers is to reorganize the Government. This is a massive reorganization. This is our battle plan—talking about the administration. This is its priority. This is our ammunition against the terrorist threat to our homeland.

A certain Senator here a few days ago talked about killing snakes. He talked about snakes in his State. He knew snakes when he saw them. Well, there are some snakes in West Virginia too. I knew about those snakes when I walked the red clay hills of southern West Virginia in Mercer County. We had copperheads back in those hills in those days and a few rattlesnakes. There are snakes. I know a snake when I see it. I saw a snake in this bill. This bill is a snake. If I could chop off its head, kill it dead, dead, dead, I would do it.

This 484 pages right here is what I am talking about. This is our initiative—this is the administration's ammunition. They know better than that. They know that is not going to make this homeland one whit safer.

I have listened very hard. I do not hear the American people clamoring for us to build a new, cumbersome, bureaucratic leviathan.

The midterm elections—despite what many of the pundits may believe—had little to do with the creation of this new Department. The American people weren't clamoring for this new bureaucracy. While Americans cast their ballots, they may have had hopes for safer communities than protection from terrorism, but I sincerely doubt that they were voting to create a huge, new bureaucracy.

Surely nobody believes that building a giant bureaucracy has suddenly become the nemesis to the threat of the acts of madmen on our people here at home.

With a battle plan such as the Bush administration is proposing, instead of crossing the Delaware River to capture the Hessian soldiers on Christmas Day, George Washington would have stayed on his side of the river and built a bureaucracy.

During the Civil War, President Lincoln would dismiss one general after another until he found one capable of building a better bureaucracy.

Perhaps what we are lacking to make this new idea really resonate with the American people is a powerful, stimulating slogan—a dramatic slogan such as the kind of slogan that we politicians slap on bumper stickers, one that would serve to inspire and unite our soldiers and our citizens.

Maybe we could draw from history to see how our new lust for a huge bureaucracy would fair.

I can picture Nathan Hale saying: I regret that I have but one bureaucracy to lose. I regret that I have but one life to give for my bureaucracy.

I can hear Captain John Paul Jones on September—I believe it was September 23, 1779—shouting: I have not yet begun to fight for my bureaucracy.

I can think of Commodore Oliver Perry hoisting his famous flag upon his ship with the motto: Don't give up the bureaucracy.

I can just imagine Commodore Stephen Decatur returning from the war on the Barbary Coast, offering his famous toast: My bureaucracy, right or wrong.

It just gives me chills to think of the people of Texas remembering the Alamo and being inspired to fight with the restoring battle cry: Remember the bureaucracy.

What about the professorial President Woodrow Wilson taking us into World War I with the proclamation: The world must be made safe for bureaucracy.

I was born during his administration. Nonsense, of course. But it has been said that necessity is the mother of invention. I guess then that political expediency has now become the mother of bureaucracy.

I don't think there is much doubt that the Senate will pass this legislation to restructure our homeland defense agencies. But my point is that the administration's plan is a sham. It is a sham. It is a political ploy. It worked well during the campaign. It was worked up in haste and for the wrong reasons.

Homeland security is a serious and dangerous matter involving the lives and the livelihoods of millions of Americans. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves to offer our people a quick bureaucratic pacifier instead of taking our time and working thoughtfully and carefully on an effective and lasting plan for the protection of the American people.

What we ought to be even more ashamed of, however, is the manner in which we are passing this bill. Prior to our recessing, hundreds of amendments were filed to make changes to the pending bill that had been reported by the Governmental Affairs Committee.

There were hundreds of amendments up at that desk. Yet Senators are choosing not to call up amendments. We are told that any amendments to this bill would force a conference with the House.

Now, get this. We are told that if we amend this bill, it will force a conference with the House of Representatives and could delay or even kill this bill. So Senators are being urged not to call up their amendments. And in many instances, they are choosing not to call up their amendments.

Is the Senate afraid of its own shadow? Are we afraid to think, to debate, to ask questions, to stand for something? Are we afraid to stand for something? Are we afraid to stand against a President of the United States? Is the Senate afraid to stand up against an administration, a political administration? Is the Senate afraid? Are Senators afraid to stand up against the President, to be the loyal opposition at this time of great distress?

It is a dangerous thing when a President believes that he is so right that he should be given any and all powers he deems necessary to achieve his ends. That is a dangerous thing. It is dangerous when a President believes that he possesses the people's consent to freely tamper with their rights and their liberties.

But it is considerably more dangerous when the elected officials such as ourselves, whose duty it is to protect the people's liberties against the excesses of an overreaching Executive, an overreaching White House, accede to a President's every request. Shame on us. Shame on us.

And it is even worse when we not only fail to impose restraint but actually aid and abet the Executive in a brazen power grab. That is exactly what this is.

The American people feel unsettled. They are nervous. They are jittery. They are scared. And they have every right to be. Their President has spent months and loads of taxpayers' dollars frightening them. Their Government has issued an unceasing proliferation of warnings about potential violence.

But the threats to our homeland go well beyond terrorist attacks. Our Nation is threatened, perhaps most seriously threatened, by a mentality that says that Presidents should have a free hand to do whatever they deem necessary whenever they deem to do it as necessary.

Our President has been speaking a great deal in recent months about our enemies and how they hate our freedoms. Mr. President, I doubt that they hate our freedoms. They hate our arrogance. They do not hate our freedoms. They hate our arrogance.

Our President has made protecting our freedoms a rallying cry. I have been working at protecting our freedoms for 50 years in this Congress. Fifty years come January 3, I have been working at protecting our freedoms. I have been helping to appropriate the moneys for our men and our women who serve in our military services.

The President has touched a raw nerve with the public, in speech after speech after speech about foreign terrorists who are attacking their liberties, and yet, in many ways, it is this President's proposals that are the most serious threats to the liberties of Americans.

We should be standing up and fighting for what is right in this legislation. That is the place to start to fight. That is where we start to fight to protect this land of ours, these people of ours, its institutions, the institutions of our country.

We should be standing up and fighting for what is right in this legislation. We talk about justice. Justice is fine. But what is right? We should be debating, offering amendments, and telling the American people like it is. We should be honest enough to admit that this new Department is a massive undertaking that is far more likely to provide political security for its proponents than to provide domestic security for the American people out there, at least for the foreseeable future.

I do not believe this is a time for us or for the American people to cower in a corner. I do not believe this is a time for the elected representatives of the American people to run like whipped dogs. This is a time for us to seize the power that was established for us by the courageous Founders of our Nation.

Mr. President, were it not for this Constitution, which I hold in my hand, you would not be presiding over this body at this moment. I say that to every Senator who sits in this body. And I say that for the people on the staffs of Senators. You would not be here. You would not be here, I would not be here were it not for this Constitution and for the great compromise—talk about a compromise—the great compromise which was entered into on July 16, 1787, out of which came this Senate, and the equality of votes of every State that is represented in this body.

This is not a time to be voiceless. This is not a time to be silent. This is not a time to vote for cloture and to hurry away home. This is not a time to give in and to give up on the ideals that led to the creation of our country.

Far too many Americans failed to go to the polls on election day and vote—far too many. I spoke of Nathan Hale, who said: "I only regret that I have but one life to lose for my country." And how many Americans did not even walk around the corner to cast a vote? They did not give one vote for their country. Far too many felt that the outcome of the election was beyond their control, that their votes would make no difference.

Today, I see far too many Members in this Senate falling into the same desultory way of thinking. Our votes matter, if we have the guts to make them matter. But, no, we are going to tuck our tails between our legs and run like whipped dogs and vote for cloture and go home. That is not right.

The American people have a right to know what is in these 484 pages. My constituents have a right to know. Your constituents, Mr. President, have a right to know. The constituents of every Senator on both sides of the aisle have a right to know what is in this bill.

We Senators have a right to know what is in this bill. We Senators ought to insist that we not invoke cloture on tomorrow but that we wait. Invoking cloture is all right down the road somewhere, maybe a week from now, but we ought to take the time to study this bill. Our staffs ought to know what is in this bill. We ought to know what is in this bill before we cast our votes.

Yes, I admit the handwriting on the wall is all too obvious. But I will do what is right in my frail way of thinking and seeing things. I will vote against this bill, unless it is amended—unless it is amended.

(Mr. CORZINE assumed the Chair.)

Mr. BYRD. I will probably vote against it, anyhow, because we are being pressured into voting for something that has not had a committee hearing, not a single hearing, 484 pages. There has not been a single hearing on this bill. There have been no witnesses called to testify in support of this bill. There have been no witnesses who have had an opportunity to stand before a committee and oppose this bill.

That is no way to legislate. Yet we are going to pass one of the most far-reaching pieces of legislation that we have passed in my 50 years in Congress.

It will provide for a massive shift of power. To whom? To the President of the United States. If he were a Democrat, I would oppose this just as vociferously, just as strongly, just as bitterly as I oppose this piece of legislation right here. I don't oppose it because we have a Republican President. I am going to oppose it because it gives away the powers of the people. It provides for a massive shift of power to the executive branch. It upsets that delicate balance of power the Framers provided to the American people over 200 years ago.

The popularity of a President is a fleeting thing, a fleeting thing. Our duty to our Nation is not.

One serious problem with the legislation before the Senate is the expanded authority it gives to the executive branch to conduct its actions in secret. Here is where I hope the press, the fourth estate, will pay close attention.

I have great respect for a free press. I have not always been happy with what the free press has written about me, but in my 50 years, I think overall the press has been very fair to me. I have no complaints. Some of the things the press has said that I didn't like I deserved. I am for a free press.

One serious problem with the legislation currently before the Senate is the expanded authority that this legislation gives to the executive branch to conduct its actions in secret, protected from the oversight, protected from the scrutiny of the Congress, the media, and the American people.

An example of this expanded secrecy that has been added in this new bill can be found in the exemptions that it provides from the Federal Advisory Committee Act. This is section 871 of the new substitute that we have just been given, the substitute that fell like manna from heaven. But this didn't come from heaven, I can assure you. It fell into our laps about 48 hours ago without any warning, and we are asked to invoke cloture on this thing tomorrow.

Let me say that again. An example of this expanded secrecy that has been added in this new bill can be found in the exemptions it provides from the Federal Advisory Committee Act. Section 871 of this new substitute we have just been given provides the Secretary of Homeland Security blanket authority—get that, blanket authority—to exempt all advisory committees in the Department from existing public disclosure rules.

That is pretty serious. This provision was not included in Senator LIEBERMAN's substitute, but it has been slipped into this new bill which was made available to us, as I said, late Tuesday night of this week. I am told it was 5 in the morning. It appeared on the web site of the House Rules Committee, I believe, the night before, Tuesday night. It was made available to us just within these last 48 hours with the hope that Senators will not have enough time to scrutinize this dramatic change to an existing statute.

The statute I am talking about here, the Federal Advisory Committee Act, applies to the ad hoc committees that are often used in the executive branch to formulate policy. This statute, the Federal Advisory Committee Act, which has been on the books for 30 years now, requires the advice provided by these advisory committees is objective and accessible to the public.

The purpose of making this information available to the public is to allow the Congress, the media, and groups outside of Government to know how the executive branch is making important policy decisions. The role of this oversight and scrutiny from the public and a free press is central to upholding the principles of our government, of our constitutional system. It ensures that the people—the people—will be the ultimate judges of the wisdom of the policies of the Federal Government.

I understand this new Homeland Security Department will be wrestling with many issues of national security that should not be subjected to public disclosure rules. Sometimes these advisory committees will be dealing with classified intelligence information or with sensitive security policy, and making this information available to the public might compromise national security and the fight against terrorism. I understand that. But that is exactly why existing law allows the President of the United States, be he a Democrat or a Republican, to waive these public disclosure rules for any advisory committee for national security reasons.

The President can do that on a case-by-case basis in the current law. So the President has this authority today. He will have it tomorrow. And he will be able to use it to protect any advisory committee in the Homeland Security Department from having to disclose information when national security information is involved. But he will be accountable for that. He will be responsible for that.

So why do we see an expansion of this authority given to the Secretary in this bill? Why do we see an expansion of this authority given to the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security in this bill?

Advisory committees can already be exempted from public disclosure rules for national security reasons by the President on a case-by-case basis. So why does this bill, then, allow the Secretary of Homeland Security to exempt any committee, regardless of whether national security is pertinent?

Why is it in there? Why do we see this new blanket authority in this bill? I will tell you why. It is because this administration wants to shield itself from any scrutiny of the public. This administration has made it very clear that it does not want anyone meddling in executive branch decisions—not the Congress, not the media, not the American public.

Since the first day this administration took office, all we have seen is a concerted effort to prevent outside criticism of its policies and conduct. The White House has refused to share information or cooperate with the Congress at every turn—maybe not at every turn, but at all too many turns.

The Vice President has refused to release documents concerning a secret energy working group, even after court orders demanding that he do so. We have read in the newspapers that the Attorney General is trying to expand the powers of the Justice Department to operate in secret, appealing another court decision that rejected his new secrecy rule. Even Tom Ridge, the President's top man in the war on terrorism, refused to testify before Congress about the steps that the administration was taking to protect the American people.

With the President's support, top officials in this administration have stonewalled Congress—stonewalled the Congress. Tom Ridge stonewalled the Appropriations Committee of the U.S. Senate. I know; I am the chairman of that committee. Invitation after invitation was extended by my colleague, Senator STEVENS, and myself for him to appear before the Appropriations Committee to testify. The answer was no. With the President's support, top officials in the administration have stonewalled Congress, stonewalled the media, and they have stonewalled the American public. Now they are hoping to expand their ability to operate in secret, to allow even less public scrutiny. There it is. It is in the bill.

The provisions in the bill allow the Secretary to use ad hoc advisory committees to craft policy in secret, without making specific findings that such secrecy is necessary in any particular instance. This unnecessary new blanket authority will give the President carte blanche to expand the culture of secrecy that now permeates this White House.

This substitute language that we have just been given also provides the same blanket exemption from disclosure rules for the Justice Department's new Office of Science and Technology. This new exemption will allow John Ashcroft, the Attorney General, to conduct even more of his duties in secret, even after the courts and the press have recently rebuked the Justice Department for secrecy abuses. This Senate is being asked to authorize the Attorney General to cloak even more of the Justice Department's activities in secrecy.

I am worried that exempting this new Science and Technology Office will allow the Justice Department to provide special treatment for corporate campaign contributors who are pushing new technologies.

Let me say that again. I am worried that exempting this new Science and Technology Office will allow the Justice Department to provide special treatment for corporate campaign contributors who are pushing new technologies. These exemptions are unnecessary and they are a danger to our people's liberty.

I believe that I have a duty to the people I represent to do what I can to improve this legislation. So I hope to offer an amendment to strike these exemptions from the bill. I will do whatever I can do to improve the legislation and keep the people and the press from being locked out of the process. The people have a right to know.

I am not among those who are willing to let this Senate be beaten into rubber stamping the language sent to us by the House. It is our job as legislators to see that the Senate protects the interests of the people who sent us here and who will foot the bill for this behemoth department.

The public disclosure exemptions in this bill are a license for abuse. I do not believe that they are worthy of the Senate's approval. So I am doing everything I can to see that this Senate does not roll over at the command of any President—whether he is a Democrat or a Republican or an Independent—when there are dangerous provisions remaining in this bill that ought not be put into law.

These issues are too fundamental to let slide with the vain hope that we will get a chance to revisit them next year. Don't forget, it is easier to pass a law than it is to repeal that law. We only need a majority in each body to pass a law and have the President sign it. Once that law is on the books, in order to repeal it, a President can veto the repeal. And, then, if only one-third plus one in either body uphold that President's veto, that is the end of it. There won't be any repeal.

The Senate must act, and act responsibly, and we ought not to be in all that hurry to pass this legislation.

Having been up until almost 2 o'clock this morning, I am tired. I want to speak a little longer. I won't be able to speak tomorrow. The Senate is going to vote on cloture in the morning. And as I wet my finger and hold it to the wind, I sense that the pressure is going to be on tomorrow to invoke cloture on this bill.

Here it is, 484 pages. It has only seen the light of 2 days—yesterday and today. It has not been before a committee; there has not been a single hearing on this bill; not a single witness has appeared before any committee in support of this 484-page bill. I doubt that any Senator in this body knows everything there is to know about this bill. I do believe that the great majority of Senators know very little about this bill, and what little most Senators know about this bill comes about as a result of some of the provisions in the bill that have been lifted out of the legislation that was reported out of Senator LIEBERMAN's committee when the bill was reported earlier this year.

Mr. President, the pressure is on. We are going to be asked to vote for cloture tomorrow. I will be surprised if the Senate does not vote for cloture. But I appeal to Senators on both sides of the aisle not to vote for cloture. Nathan Hale regretted that he had but one life to lose for his country. I hope Senators will take the same view about their responsibilities to the people.

They have a responsibility to stay until they know what is in this bill, and not to invoke cloture on it until they know what is in it, until their staffs know what is in it, and until they, Senators, have had an opportunity to offer amendments to make corrections in the bill.

I daresay many Senators will find provisions in this bill they have not seen in any bill before, that are new to this bill, that are new to the Senate, and that they, those Senators, dislike. They have a duty to their constituents. I do not have to tell other Senators what their duties are to their constituents. They have the same duties to their constituents that I have to my constituents. But I have a duty to my constituents not to roll over and play dead, not to roll over and appear to be oblivious to what is in the bill, just pass it and go home and say: We have passed a bill creating the Department of Homeland Security. Whoopee. This will make us all safer.

This will not make us one whit, not one tiny whit safer.

That bill, if it passed tomorrow, would not be implemented for another year. It will take another 12 months before it is implemented. The same people who will be out there protecting the homes of the American people a year from today, if they are out there a year from today, will be out there tomorrow. They are out there tonight. They are out there on the borders—the northern border, the southern border—the Atlantic coastline, the Pacific coastline, the gulf coastline, the ports of this country, the ports of entry.

They are out there tonight protecting the airports. They are protecting the ports of entry all over this country. They are protecting the nuclear facilities, the nuclear plants. They are standing at their stations in the law enforcement agencies. They are standing at their stations in the fire departments. They are standing at their stations in the health departments. They are out there now. They are out there tonight. When I go home to sleep tonight and pray the Lord my soul to keep, they will be out there. I will be asleep; they will be there.

This bill is not what is putting them there. They are already there, and they are being put there by the taxpayers' money that flows through the Appropriations Committee in this Senate. So they are there. Do not think for a moment that this country has to have this bill creating this massive bureaucracy in which there will be at least 28 agencies that will be crammed into a new Department—170,000 people employed.

May I say to the people sitting back here on the benches—I am talking to these staff people right back here—pay attention here—170,000 people employed in this new agency. They are not employed by virtue of these 484 pages in this bill.

The Senate apparently is on a path to rush to consider this legislation, and we can all say: Whoopee, let's go home now. We have created a Department of Homeland Security. Everybody is safer now.

But don't you believe it.

The Senate's legislative counsel did not finish drafting this behemoth bill until the wee hours of yesterday morning, and now Senators are being pressured to pass it without question and without comment. What a shabby way to treat the security and safety of the American people, those people who are looking right at us through those electronic lenses.

As I have said all along, this new Department likely will take many years to become effective. We should not simply put a new name on a hodgepodge of agencies and claim that the Nation is, ipso facto, instantly safer. What a sham. What a sham. A lot of Senators who vote for this are going to come to realize that when it is too late to change their votes. What a sham. Yet this legislation is being bull-rushed through Congress and is being hailed as the great homeland security panacea.

This new bill is 484 pages long. Here it is. I have not weighed it, but it weighs as heavy as 484 pages. Yet we will not be one whit closer to homeland security if it passes.

If the House and Senate wanted to provide true protections, we would be working to complete action on the appropriations bills instead of playing this gargantuan shell game. If the President wanted to do more than score political points in a rehashed retread of a stump speech, he would loose the bonds, he would cut the handcuffs from the House leadership and urge them to pass appropriations bills which contain critical homeland security funds that could provide real protection for our people, and provide it quickly.

Those dollars could make a difference today. Those dollars and the protections they would fund could save people's lives. We need not wait for a new Department to set up yet another huge bureaucracy. Instead, the House leadership is stuck in concrete. The appropriations bills may never see the light of day. There are 11 of them—11 of them—that have been reported from the Senate Appropriations Committee. They may never see the light of day, and the security of American people continues to be at risk.

How many tape recordings of Osama bin Laden do we need to hear before we start to take immediate action to protect ourselves in a meaningful way, not in a sham, sham legislative procedure that will produce another massive bill, massive shift of power, in a massive new bureaucracy? How many more threats do we need to hear? How many more threats need to be made?

Just in recent times, in recent hours the newspapers are reporting that U.S. intelligence officials believe that terrorist groups may be planning a new wave of attacks on Western targets. According to these reports, our intelligence agencies have detected a significant spike in intelligence chatter during the last 10 days that strongly indicate new assaults are being planned.

What more warning do we need? Do we have to wait until the chatter turns into screams of terror? Do we really believe this new Department of Homeland Security will provide the immediate protections that are so desperately needed? We are not only fooling ourselves, we are also jeopardizing the lives of the American people.

The new Department of Homeland Security will provide no immediate security—none. The legislation gives the President another year in which to put the pieces of this Department together. That is a year without any significant improvements to our Nation's protections. Maybe we should rename this the Department of Homeland Security Delay.

The appropriations bills, on the other hand, that are languishing in the other body controlled by the President's party would provide real security right now. All we have to do is just enact them.

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported appropriations bills for fiscal year 2003 that contained a total of $25.6 billion for homeland defense funding.

That is a lot of money, $25.6 billion for homeland defense. That is real money for the real defense of our homeland that could be available now, under our committee-reported bill, if the House Republican leadership on the other side of the Capitol could get White House permission to complete action on those appropriations bills. It could be done now.

The House is getting ready to leave town. They do not have to leave town. They could stay in town. We ought to pass those appropriations bills. That is money available now to protect lives and prevent future attacks. But under this constant stream of continuing resolutions, many homeland defense investments cannot take place.

The Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill, the Treasury appropriations bill, the Agriculture appropriations bill, the VA/HUD appropriations bill, the Labor, Health and Human Services appropriations bill, these are fancy names that probably do not mean that much to anyone listening, but to the security and safety of the American people, these bills mean a whole lot more than a new letterhead on the same old Government stationery, which will come about as a result of the passage of this 484-page bill.

Instead, we are being told to create this new bureaucracy and put funding for homeland security on autopilot with a constant stream of continuing resolutions. It is an irresponsible path and one I hope Congress has the wisdom to avoid. The Senate's VA/HUD and Commerce Justice State appropriations bills provide more than $3.5 billion for police officers, for firefighters, and for other first responders. That is $3.5 billion that could be made available next week. All that has to be done is for the House to get the signal from the executive branch which controls the Republican leadership in the House. All that is needed is for the White House to unloose the shackles that are on the House leadership and say, pass that appropriations bill. We restored over $1 billion of cuts the President proposed for State and local law enforcement programs. That is real safety, without any delay.

What is the administration's response? The administration says we are spending too much money on the security of the American people.

Mr. President, you cannot place a price tag on homeland security. You cannot protect lives on the cheap.

The Senate Labor, Health and Human Services appropriations bill provides $3.8 billion to protect against biological and chemical weapons. We know that terrorists have them. We are fools if we do not invest in defenses against these weapons. The funds in these appropriations bills help to provide real savings now, without delay. You do not have to wait on passing a 484-page bill which cannot be implemented for another 12 months.

What is the President's response? Hold the line on the appropriations, he says. Hold the line. He has stopped the House Republican leadership from allowing these investments in homeland security to move forward.

Mr. President—I am talking to the President at the other end of the avenue—you cannot place a price tag on homeland security. You cannot protect lives on the cheap.

The Senate Agriculture appropriations bill includes more than $150 million for the Food and Drug Administration to ensure our food supply is protected from terrorism and to accelerate the development and approval of medicines and tests to protect Americans from bioterrorism agents. This is a real saving. There is no delay here. Just pass the appropriations bill. We stand ready. But the administration has the handcuffs on the House leadership.

Apparently the administration thinks a safe food supply and vaccines to counter anthrax are too expensive. I say once again, a price tag cannot be placed on homeland security. You cannot protect lives on the cheap.

Take the Senate Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill. It funds new FBI agents. The Treasury appropriations bill funds critical border security initiatives. These bills represent billions of dollars for homeland security. They help to provide real safety without delay, but regrettably the White House says no deal. According to this administration, the price is too high.

In my 50 years in Congress, if the Lord lets me live a few more days, this is the most cynical and potentially most devastating political game any administration has ever played. I am talking about administrations under Republican Presidents and under Democratic Presidents.

While funding battles are not uncommon and while many Congresses and administrations have not agreed on all the priorities, there has never been such a dispute that threatens the security of the American people. This administration would rather protect its political backside than the lives of this Nation's citizens. It is a calculated, cynical, manipulative, and irresponsible approach that I pray does not result in lost lives.

It disgusts me that the President has worked with the House Republican leadership to delay these appropriations bills. That is exactly what has happened. You mark my word. After the new year, when there is a new administration that takes over and this body goes under Republican control, as the other body will be under Republican control, you watch how fast those appropriations bill will pass. They will then pass, and this administration will be able to say; see now how things work under this new administration, how fast we get things done. I think that is the game we will see.

In fact, at the administration's urging, the House of Representatives has not considered a regular appropriations bill in 16 weeks. That is 4 months. And the White House machinations have not stopped at the regular appropriations bills. At the direction of the administration, $8.9 billion for homeland security investments were squeezed out of supplemental appropriations bills approved unanimously by the Senate Appropriations Committee, made up of 15 Democrats and 14 Republicans. If the President were serious about homeland security, we would do far more than simply pass a feel-good bill of 484 pages that creates a new department. We would pass these appropriations bills. We would train our first responders. We would provide them with equipment to carry out their mission of protecting the American people. We would put more agents on the borders. We would close the security loopholes in our ports. We would buy vaccines and increase our capacity to handle an attack using a biological weapon. We would invest in immediate homeland security initiatives and not rely on a campaign slogan to protect us 6 months or 1 year or even 5 years from now.

I hope we will not try to sell the American people this bill of goods on homeland security. It is nothing but snake oil. A new department would be welcome, but it will not be enough. We need to do much more and we need to do it quickly.

The Senate Appropriations Committee reported appropriations bills for fiscal year 2003 that contained a total of $25.6 billion for non-DOD homeland defense funding, an increase of $5 billion over the levels approved last year. That is real money for the defense of our homeland that could be available now, under our committee-reported bills for fiscal year 2003, if the White House would but take off the shackles from the House Appropriations Committee and let it work, let it complete action on the bills in the regular manner.

This authorizing bill we are debating right now provides nothing immediately for homeland defense. It has a 12-month transition period built into it. It sounds good. It will make a good headline. But it does nothing immediately to increase the security of our country. The appropriations bills, on the other hand, would do something immediately. Right now, all we have to do is enact. That is real money for real protection.

Under the continuing resolution we are operating under now, the significant increases for homeland defense funding that we approved in our committee bills cannot take place. Let me give some examples of what will not be funded under the continuing resolution.

Under the continuing resolution, only $651 million will be available for the Office of Domestic Preparedness to train and equip State and local law enforcement personnel to handle biological and chemical weapons, this compared to $2 billion that would be available in the Senate Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill. Crucial bioterrorism research will be postponed. The Senate Labor-HHS appropriations bill provided nearly $1.5 billion for bioterrorism activities at the National Institutes of Health. This would fund research and infrastructure improvements necessary to develop countermeasures against smallpox, anthrax, and other deadly pathogens. Bioterrorism funding for NIH under a long-term continuing resolution would be limited to approximately $107 million.

The fiscal year 2003 Senate bill contains a large increase for hospital preparedness funding. Why worry about local hospitals? Again, just today news accounts detail a warning from the FBI to hospitals in Houston, San Francisco, Chicago, and Washington, DC, that they may be targets of a terrorist threat perhaps from anthrax. That is getting close to home, Washington, DC. The $593 million worth of grants in the Senate appropriations bill are necessary to make sure hospitals have the proper equipment, the staff, and the training to handle a bioterrorism attack. A long-term continuing resolution, however, would provide only $129 million in fiscal year 2003 for this activity. In total, a long-term continuing resolution for the Labor-HHS bill would provide only $1.8 billion for bioterrorism preparedness in fiscal year 2003. This is $2 billion less than the committee-reported appropriations bill. What a difference.

Under the continuing resolution, only $540 million would be available to local fire departments, from FEMA, for training and equipping firemen for weapons of mass destruction. For fiscal year 2003, the Senate committee VA-HUD appropriations bill provided a total of $900 million for the fire grant program.

On September 11, 2001, in New York City, we learned that fire and police could not communicate by radio, undermining the response to those vicious terrorist attacks. This is a nationwide problem. We found that out as we conducted testimony on our appropriations bills earlier this year in hearings conducted by the Senate Appropriations Committee. We included $180 million in the committee bill for grants for interoperable communications equipment for firefighters, none of which would be available under the continuing resolution. Under the continuing resolution, $180 million that the committee approved for grants to upgrade State and local emergency operation centers would not be funded and $75 million for grants to upgrade FEMA's 28 research and rescue teams would not be funded.

The Coast Guard is also one of the largest agencies to be included in the new Department of Homeland Security. The Coast Guard just signed the largest procurement contract in the history of the entire Department of Transportation, the so-called deep water capability replacement project. It is a comprehensive effort to modernize the Coast Guard's aging fleet of ships, planes, and helicopters so that the agency can better execute its homeland security and other missions.

Under the continuing resolution—that is what we will be operating under—the Coast Guard will have to start delaying the procurement of long-range aircraft as soon as December. In fact, due to the absence of adequate funding, the Coast Guard will have to start paying contract penalties totaling $500,000 per month.

So at the same time as the Coast Guard is being merged into the new homeland security agency, the inadequate funding provided under the continuing resolution will mean the Coast Guard will delay the procurement of critical homeland security aircraft while simultaneously wasting half a million of the taxpayers' dollars every month on contract penalties.

The Senate committee Treasury-general government bill added $18 million to the Customs Service for container security administration. This funding allows for inspection of shipping containers before they reach U.S. ports. Currently, only 2 percent of the containers that come into this country are inspected. Yet this funding will not be available under the continuing resolution.

The Senate committee energy and water bill includes $64 million to provide for the security guards at critical Corps of Engineer infrastructure sites. Under a long-term continuing resolution, this funding would not be available. Pass the appropriations bill. There is the money. It is available.

This Congress faces a choice. Despite its myriad problems, we will likely pass this legislation to create a Department of Homeland Security. The President will make his speeches to try to convince the American people to feel good. My, we can feel good about this new Department we will have created. What the President will not tell the American people is that the shiny new Department will not be effective until far into the future. What he will not tell the American people is that in the interim, they—the American people—may be less safe rather than more safe because of the chaos and confusion inherent in massive Government reorganizations. What he will not tell the American people is that he continues—he, the President—to block investments that would help to protect the American people from terrorist attacks today.

If we truly want to protect our constituents, if we truly want to make a difference in our constituents' lives, we will provide the funds that are so critically needed. We will support the FBI. We will support the police officers. The funds will support our firefighters in our hometown. We will strengthen our border patrols and our port security. We will take steps to fight terrorism today. We will not wait until the station is ready at the new Department of Homeland Security. The price of continued delay is simply too great to fathom.

Mr. President:

> The Moving Finger writes; and, having writ,
> Moves on; nor all your Piety nor Wit
> Shall lure it back to cancel half a Line,
> Nor all your Tears wash out a Word of it.

So, Mr. President, tonight I am writing the record. I will not have that opportunity tomorrow because on tomorrow the Senate will vote to invoke cloture. I urge Senators not to do that, not to vote to invoke cloture tomorrow. Senators should give themselves more time, give their staffs more time to study these 484 pages in this new bill, this bill that has not seen a committee witness, this bill that has not been in a committee room, this bill that was unknown to the Members of this Senate 48 hours ago—a massive bill providing for a massive shift of power to the President of the United States. And once that power is shifted, Senators, remember, it is going to be very difficult to retrieve that power. Yet the legislative branch is just about to do that.

The executive branch never hesitates to stand up in defense of its prerogatives. The judicial branch never hesitates to stand up in defense of its prerogatives. But the same cannot be said of the legislative branch. Nearly always in the legislative branch, half of the branch is made up of supporters of the administration. If it were a monarchy, these would be supporters of the king. If it were in the days of the Revolution, they would be Tories. Half the legislative branch stands up in the defense of the king, in the defense of the executive branch. Only half, if that many, stand up in defense of the legislative branch. Yet we all in this legislative branch, whether we are members of the party that controls the administration or not, we stand before that desk up there and we lift our hand to Almighty God and we put a hand upon the Holy Bible and we swear an oath to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

Are we doing that? Are we supporting and defending this Constitution which provides for a balance of powers, a separation of powers, three departments equally balanced? Is that what we are supporting? That is what we swore to support. That is what we swore we would support. But not all of us are going to vote that way.

There are half of us in the two bodies, roughly speaking, who are always ready to run to the executive branch and uphold the executive branch against our own nest, against the legislative branch. I hope it will not be that way tomorrow. I hope that Senators will say whoa, whoa, whoa, just hold on here; let's just wait a little bit. Let's don't vote for cloture today. Let's have a few more days to debate this legislation, see what's in it, offer amendments to it, clean it up, protect the American people, their liberties and their rights. I call upon Senators to do that.

I have watched the Senate floor today. I have heard the assertion made that the Senate has been considering the pending homeland security bill for 7 weeks now. Let's be clear about that.

The Senate just received this homeland security bill, not 7 weeks ago but just the night before yesterday. We have had access to it for 36 to 48 hours, perhaps. The Senate did spend 7 weeks debating another homeland security bill, but that bill is no longer before the Senate. That bill is no longer before the Senate. All of those weeks of debate and amendments have been thrown out the window. In its place we are now debating a new bill, crafted in secret, crafted behind the shades and curtains of darkness; a new bill which many of us have not had the time to read because we just received it. I haven't had time to read it. I have only read parts of it. I haven't had time to read this bill.

We were not involved in drafting this bill. I had nothing to do with the drafting of that bill. It did not go through the committee process. There were no hearings, no markups. It was drafted, not unlike the President's plan, behind closed doors and hidden away from the eyes of the American public. So I must say I am a little distressed when I hear Senators saying that the Congress should pass this bill quickly because we have exhausted debate on it.

I grow even more distressed when I read in this morning's papers that a number of controversial provisions had been quietly inserted into this new bill in the hopes that no one would notice them before the bill passed.

Congress Daily reported this morning that provisions have been inserted into this bill to eliminate or reduce a manufacturer's product liability. Sure enough, title VIII of the new bill would authorize the new Homeland Security Secretary to provide manufacturers with liability protections for a broad range of items, from drugs to life preservers, in case such equipment malfunctions or does not work. According to the Democratic staff of the Governmental Affairs Committee, even if manufacturers sold equipment, technology, or drugs that they knew would not work as intended, the manufacturer could not be held liable for punitive damages unless he knowingly participated in the terrorist act giving rise to the injuries.

Do Senators know that? Do Senators know that this bill does just that? Exactly. Do Senators know that?

Congress Daily reports that limited liability protections already in place for vaccines would be expanded in this bill to include vaccine components such as the preservative Thimerosal, manufactured by Eli Lilly and Company. These drugs, I am informed, are already the subject of class action lawsuits by parents who claim the product's high mercury levels have caused their children's autism.

I have heard other Senators expressing dismay about these provisions that have been slipped into this bill. I have heard other Senators expressing puzzlement, dismay, consternation, surprise—to find such provisions, to find this bill as it is. And yet we are being asked to invoke cloture tomorrow, invoke cloture so that we limit ourselves in future debate to 30 hours, a total of 30 hours on this bill.

The American people out there don't know this. The American people are being told that this is a great bill, this is a good bill, we are about to create a Department of Homeland Security and you will all be safer, ladies and gentlemen, out there in the hills and the prairies and the valleys and the mountains. You will all be safer.

The American people are being hoodwinked. We are complicitous in going along with the idea—going along with this sham. We are all guilty of going along with this. Yet we are going to invoke cloture on ourselves. We are going to invoke the gag rule.

We hear that this Senate is the greatest deliberative body in the world—greatest deliberative body in the world, the Senate of the United States. Yet we have been on this bill now parts of 2 days—just parts—and tomorrow morning we are going to put the gag rule on. We are going to invoke cloture so that we will deprive ourselves of the opportunity and we will deprive ourselves willingly of the opportunity to expose the weaknesses of this bill—to expose to the people who send us here, the judges of our political fortunes. We are going to say no to the people who send us here when we put this gag rule into effect and say to ourselves that we are not going to be interested in debating this longer than 30 hours, if that much time is used. We are saying to the American people who send us here we are putting the gag rule on you. We are putting the blindfolder on you.

How many of us would like to go to the American people in the next campaign for reelection and tell them that we believe in blindfolding them, and we don't believe they should know what is in this bill. It has some good provisions, I am sure, but we are willing to shut ourselves off here.

This is a bad bill—bad because there are some provisions in it that are bad—not all but some provisions in it are bad. Some provisions we don't even know about. We intend to vote on it—pig in a poke, blindfold ourselves, gag ourselves. We are willing to do that.

Are we willing to draw our moneys, our salaries? The American people pay us to represent them, to protect them, to protect their liberties, to protect their Constitution. If the American people knew that there were certain provisions in here of which some Senators were just becoming aware, the American people would say to all of us: Hold up. Take a look at that bill. Don't you vote for that homeland security bill until you fully know what you are doing. They would say: Hold up here. Don't you come back to me asking for my vote again if you are going to vote to hoodwink the American people by shutting off debate so you can get out of there, so you can go home. We ought to be right here. Here is where we ought to be until we know what is in this bill. We ought not pass this bill now. We ought to pass the appropriations bills that provide real homeland security for the American people.

So these drugs, as I say, are already the subject of class action lawsuits by parents who claim the products with high mercury levels have caused their children's autism. Is this what the President's homeland security proposal is really all about—exempting multibillion-dollar pharmaceutical companies from lawsuits when the products they sell to the American public do not function properly or, even worse, injure or kill somebody—multibillion-dollar companies from lawsuits when the technological products they sell to the American people do not function properly? What is this? Is this a payoff for those companies for their contributions in the past election?

Yet another provision in the bill would require liability claims against smallpox vaccine manufacturers to go through the Federal tort system.

Let me say that again.

Yet another provision in the bill would require liability claims against smallpox vaccine manufacturers to go through the Federal tort system. The Federal Government would pay the damages. And punitive damages would be banned.

The new bill also would limit liabilities for airport screening companies and high-tech firms that develop equipment for domestic security. It would aid the airline industry by extending aviation war-risk insurance for a year, and giving airports another year to install baggage screening equipment.

I wonder how many Senators know that provision is in this bill.

According to the New York Times, the bill would reverse an earlier measure and allow American companies that have moved offshore in order to evade taxes to contract with the Homeland Security Department.

How about that? How many Senators know that? Let me say that again.

The bill would reverse an earlier measure and allow American companies that have moved offshore in order to evade taxes to contract with the Homeland Security Department.

These kinds of provisions underscore just how ridiculous this homeland security debate has become. Anyone who opposes this legislation will be labeled unpatriotic. You can count on that. The sting of that political attack is enough to allow gobs of complete and utter junk to be shoved in this bill and shoved through the Congress with lightning speed. The fear of being subjected to utterly vile campaign political attacks is allowing a slew of dangerous provisions—provisions that would never ever get through on their own—to be pushed along with hardly a glance. Just hold your nose, pinch it, and vote for cloture and vote for this bill. Go home feeling good. Oh, we passed some feel-good legislation. Whoopee, great, hot diggedy dog. We passed a piece of feel-good legislation.

The American people should be afraid. The American people should be very afraid not only of Osama bin Laden and Saddam Hussein but of the monumental cynicism driven by this White House, and regrettably unopposed by this body.

Mr. President, I apologize to the Senate, to the staff, to the pages, all who work in this body—they work hard; they work long hours—for detaining you from going home early and getting an early supper. We call it supper down in West Virginia. Call it dinner, if you wish. We have kept you waiting, and I apologize for my part. Who else has done it? I am the one rascal here who has kept you waiting. I apologize for that.

Had we not been faced with a cloture vote tomorrow, I could have waited until tomorrow and said these things. But when else am I supposed to say it? If cloture is invoked tomorrow, I will have no opportunity to say it. Then we only have 30 hours—all of us, 100 Senators have 30 hours—and I suppose that is an hour each at most.

There is a record standing. There is a record that stands with him who holds the waters in his hands; there is a record that stands. That record will be written, and it will be there for the next thousand years for all who want to read it.

I believe the American people expect us to oppose this way of legislating. It is not as our children are being told the way to make laws.

Mr. President, I end my remarks, as I began them earlier today, by reading from 1st Corinthians, chapter 14, verse 8 and verse 9:

> For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?
>
> So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? For ye shall speak into the air.

Mr. President, that is the way I began my remarks. If we pass this bill, we are going to be the trumpet that gives forth an uncertain sound. The American people are going to be told, and they are going to believe, that they are made more safe, but we will have sent forth an uncertain sound. The people will not be made more safe by this piece of legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I have two short statements that I would like to make concerning this legislation. The first deals with the use of appropriated funds.

As my colleagues know, one of the major issues confronting Congress with respect to establishing the Department of Homeland Security was the extent to which the Homeland Secretary would be given the authority to transfer funds between appropriations accounts or among the organizations and programs within the new Department.

Underlying this issue are two critical questions—how best to give the Homeland Secretary the flexibility he or she needs to organize and operate the new Department, and how best to preserve the Congress's constitutional authority to appropriate funds and to oversee their use.

Previous versions of the Homeland Security Department legislation included extensive language governing how the Department would allocate and use appropriated funds and funds generated through property disposal or gifts from outside the Federal Government.

The compromise embodied in the final version of the Homeland Security Department legislation now before us takes a somewhat different approach, but the net effect is the same: Congress's appropriations authorities are maintained. Transferred funds must be used for the purposes for which they were appropriated, and Congress must approve, in advance, the reallocation of transferred funds away from their originally intended purposes.

Language added to the final bill reinforces the requirement that personnel, assets, and obligations transferred to the new Department shall be allocated in accordance with section 1531(a)(2) of title 31, United States Code. That section of permanent law requires that funds transferred within or between Executive branch agencies to finance transferred functions or activities must be used for a purpose for which the appropriation was originally available.

During the final negotiations on this bill, any language dealing directly with use of the general authority to transfer funds was dropped, since it is an authorization act. That authority will be included in the continuing resolution that I hope we will pass to keep the Federal Government functioning after we adjourn or recess this year. Since virtually every annual appropriations act includes general transfer authority language, the negotiators agreed that it was more consistent and effective to include the new Department's transfer authority in an appropriations act. The continuing resolution is our first appropriations opportunity to accomplish this objective. I intend to see to it that it will be in the resolution if at all possible, and I believe it is already agreed to.

The negotiators did retain in the authorization bill the language regarding property disposal and gifts. The language also requires that the new Department submit a detailed budget request annually beginning with fiscal year 2004. That will be the request we receive next year.

The continuing resolution language provides general transfer authority of $500 million for fiscal year 2003 and the same amount in fiscal year 2004. It stipulates that this authority may not be used unless for higher priority items, based on unforeseen homeland security requirements, than those for which originally appropriated and in no case where the item for which funds are requested has been denied by the Congress. The language provides an additional $140 million in transfer authority for fiscal year 2003 for the salaries and expenses associated with the initiation of the Department.

The appropriations language further requires that the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations receive 15 days' advance notice before any funding transfer is made, and it establishes that the new Department will submit formal reprogramming requests to these committees for any proposed funding transfer. The language further stipulates that, of the total amount of transfer authority provided, and except as otherwise specifically authorized by law, not to exceed two percent of any appropriations available to the Home Secretary may be transferred between appropriations. I am satisfied those meet our general requirements, although they are not in the original request I made in the Governmental Affairs Committee on which I serve.

In many respects, these provisions mirror language that is included annually in every Department of Defense Appropriations Act. In addition, use of transfer authority would be subject to approval or disapproval in writing by the Committees on Appropriations, which would review reprogramming requests submitted and considered under established procedures based on the reprogramming procedures used by the Defense Department and Congress for defense transfer authority actions. We intend to mirror the procedure that has been used so successfully with regard to defense matters when we are reviewing national security matters.

Finally, the authorization bill includes a provision intended to help Congress to assess the long-term funding requirements for the new Department. That provision requires annual submission of a Future Years Homeland Security Program that projects spending requirements for at least five fiscal years. This detailed, multi-year document is due beginning with the fiscal year 2005 budget request.

The final authorization language, and the language in the continuing resolution, preserve the statutory and administrative requirements needed to ensure that any funds made available to the new Department are used effectively and efficiently and according to the will of the people as reflected through their elected Senators and Representatives.

This language, and the annual appropriations process, ensure that the Homeland Security has the appropriate authorities to organize and operate the new Department, and that Congress will remain directly engaged in deciding how appropriated funds are used, or reallocated, by the Executive branch.

In so doing, I believe, and it has been my intent working with the distinguished chairman, that this language preserves Congress's Constitutional and rightful role in our government—a role that the Founding Fathers intended and that our constituents demand. Our constitutional oath requires Members to assure that our constituents' demand for our oversight will be fulfilled.

I have a second short statement. I have been very interested in preserving the Coast Guard's non-homeland security mission performance under this bill. I will discuss for the Senate today a vitally important section of the homeland security legislation that we consider here.

This section—Section 888—is entitled "Preserving Coast Guard Mission Importance," and its implementation is essential to maintaining without significant reduction the Coast Guard's non-homeland security capabilities and missions.

We all recognize the critical homeland security missions the Coast Guard performs. However, it is just as critical to the United States that the Coast guard effectively and successfully accomplish its non-homeland security missions. The criticality of these non-homeland security missions extends far beyond the 30 coastal and Great Lake states. These non-homeland security missions affect the maritime safety, law enforcement, environmental conditions, and economic security of our entire nation.

The Coast Guard's non-homeland security missions are marine safety, search and rescue, aids to navigation, living marine resources—including fisheries law enforcement, marine environmental protection, and ice operations.

All these missions are critical to the well-being of Alaskans, and we rely on the Coast Guard virtually every day for protection and assistance in these mission areas. I am confident that my colleagues who also will speak on this section of the bill will attest further to the importance to their states and to the rest of the nation of preserving the Coast Guard's vital non-homeland security capabilities and missions.

Preserving these missions and capabilities is the fundamental intent and purpose of Section 888.

The Coast Guard cannot accomplish its non-homeland security missions effectively and successfully unless its current capabilities in these areas are preserved intact and without significant reduction. Section 888 mandates the preservation of these capabilities, and of the Coast Guard's authorities and functions in these areas, unless Congress specifies otherwise in subsequent acts.

I would add at this point that, since September 11, 2001, the Coast Guard has assumed greatly expanded homeland security responsibilities without seeing a reduction in its non-homeland security requirements. This is a strong justification for allocating even more total resources to the Coast Guard on an annual and long-term basis.

Section 888 further reinforces and protects the Coast Guard's non-homeland security missions and capabilities by preventing the diversion of any mission, function, or asset—including ships, aircraft, and helicopters—to the principal and continuing use of any other organization, unit, or entity of the Homeland Security Department. This restriction is intended to minimize, if not eliminate, any prospect of the diversion from the Coast Guard of the personnel, equipment or other resources needed to perform its non-homeland security missions. Personnel details or assignments that do not reduce the Coast Guard's capability to perform these missions are permitted.

Section 888 further prohibits the Homeland Secretary from reducing the Coast Guard's non-homeland security missions and capabilities substantially or significantly unless Congress specifies otherwise in subsequent Acts.

The Homeland Security Secretary may waive this restriction for no more than 90 days, but he or she must first declare and certify to Congress that a clear, compelling, and immediate need exists for such a waiver.

If he or she exercises the waiver authority, the Homeland Secretary must submit to Congress a detailed justification. Thus, the elected Senators and Representatives of the American people will have an opportunity to determine whether they agree or disagree with the waiver. We will have the opportunity to assess the impact of such a waiver on the Coast Guard's non-homeland security missions and to make our views known should there be any cause for concerns.

The language in Section 888 does provide more flexibility than the Coast Guard-related language in the earlier versions of the Homeland Security Department bills that we have been debating since July. However, this latest language still will protect the Coast Guard from any major changes to its non-homeland security missions and capabilities because it clearly does not provide the authority to make wholesale and sweeping changes in these areas.

This final language also includes other important provisions that will contribute to the Coast Guard's overall well-being and effectiveness as part of the new Homeland Security Department, as well as help preserve its non-homeland security missions and capabilities. These provisions have been carried over from at least one of the previous versions of the legislation, or they have been crafted to further enhance the Coast Guard's position in the new Department.

These provisions include language transferring the Coast Guard to the new Department as a freestanding and distinct entity that is not under the jurisdiction of any of the Department's new directorates, and language ensuring that the Service's Commandant shall report directly to the Homeland Secretary without being required to report through any other departmental official.

Take separately and together, these subsections strengthen the institutional position of the Coast Guard and the Commandant within the Department, thus enhancing the Service's ability to compete for resources and to influence policy in both the non-homeland security and homeland security areas. They are an unambiguous statement by the Congress about the importance of the Coast Guard and all its missions within the Department.

Another subsection requires the new Department's Inspector General to report annually to Congress on the mission performance of the Coast Guard, with a particular emphasis on the non-homeland security missions. This information should help Congress identify whether additional actions are needed to preserve these non-homeland security missions and capabilities.

The Homeland Secretary also is required by another subsection to report to Congress not later than 90 days after enactment of the Act on whether the procurement rate in the Service's top-priority modernization program—the integrated deepwater system—can be accelerated by 10 years. Timely implementation of the Deepwater program is essential to maintaining and improving the Coast Guard's capabilities to accomplish all its missions. Congress should consider whether accelerating the program is an affordable and cost-effective way to accomplish these objectives, especially in the non-homeland security area.

A final subsection ensures that the conditions and restrictions in Section 888 shall not apply when the Coast Guard operates as a service in the Navy under section 3 of title 14, United States code. It would be inappropriate to apply these conditions and restrictions under such circumstances. Under section 3 of title 14, the Coast Guard becomes part of the Navy in Wartime or as directed by the President.

In summary, Section 888 resulted from productive negotiations with the White House and our House colleagues during which all sides strived to make reasonable compromises that would enable Congress to pass a final version of the Homeland Security Department legislation during this post-election session. Refinements suggested by the Coast Guard also are included in the language.

The language maintains the structural and operational integrity of the Coast Guard, the authority of the Commandant, the non-homeland security missions of the Coast Guard, and the Service's capabilities to carry out these missions even as it is transferred to the new Department. The language is clearly intended to assure that the important homeland security priorities of the new Department will not eclipse the Coast Guard's crucial non-homeland security missions and capabilities.

Section 888 strikes the right balance at this time between maintaining the Coast Guard's vital non-homeland security missions and capabilities and permitting it to carry out important homeland security responsibilities.

Just as importantly, this language and the annual appropriations process, ensure that Congress will remain directly engaged in deciding the extent to which any significant changes occur in the future to the Coast Guard's non-homeland security missions and capabilities. Congress's continued and direct engagement in such matters is essential given the importance to the American people of these missions and capabilities.

And again, these missions and capabilities are vital to my State of Alaska.

I thank my distinguished friend for allowing me to make these two statements. I am late to a meeting. I wanted to make sure we explained to the Senate what we have done in modifying this bill.

I know it does not meet totally the requirements and approval of my friend from West Virginia. But I do think, under the circumstances, that we will have this continued role of supervision and we will retain the same type of control over reprogrammings of the new Homeland Security Department that we have over the Department of Defense. We should be able to continue in the future the same kind of Congressional connection to the changes in the use of funds—and there will be changes, based on changing priorities, changing circumstances—and we are part of that process. It will not be done without the prior approval of Congress.

I think I can assure my friend, in my judgment, we have preserved to the maximum extent possible our constitutional role in this process as it goes forward. There is no question every appropriations bill annually will address this issue and we will address it as we have in connection with defense matters in the past.

I thank my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator is welcome. I appreciate what he has said. I hope the Senator's assurances—I know they are sincerely given—will prove to be direct and true. I must say I have great concerns about this legislation as it is written as to the verbiage that we find in this new package that is on our desks today. It made its appearance yesterday. I hope the distinguished Senator from Alaska is accurate and that he is correct, and that the assurances which he has been given and which he is giving will prove to be the case.

I have a great deal of confidence in my friend from Alaska. I have implicit confidence in him. I have never had that confidence shaken. But that confidence I have in him does not extend beyond him, I have to say truthfully, to the people in this administration. But I do trust my friend and I know he will try to his level best to see to it that the administration deals fairly and squarely with us in the appropriations process.

With that, I again thank him.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. I give the Senator my assurance we will continue to work together to assure we maintain our constitutional role in the activities of this new Department. But I also feel it is absolutely necessary that this bill be passed this year because if it is not, regardless of the size of the bill, it will literally die at the end of December and we will have to start all over again. With the tensions facing the world and challenges our Government faces to maintain homeland security, it is absolutely essential we start forward. We have a slight disagreement on that. But I do believe this bill gives us a framework to work with this subject.

I think the ongoing responsibility to assure the new Department will continue to be effective will primarily rest with the appropriations process. This will be an enormous demand, a new demand on our Treasury, to fund a wholly new type of homeland security.

We are consolidating a whole series of agencies, hopefully bringing about some new efficiencies. But it will require increased money.

Senator BYRD and I have, will continue to have, the role of seeing to it the Senate's operations with regard to the appropriations process are fully understood by the new homeland security department and its personnel, and that we will work effectively to see to it we fulfill our constitutional responsibility with regard to control of the people's money.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator. I have never seen anything in the demeanor of the distinguished Senator from Alaska, anything in his words, anything in his daily activities, the record he has made here, that would create any doubt, as far as I am concerned, in him and his intention to carry this out. I have to say I don't have the same kind of confidence in the people at the other end of the avenue. I think we are making a huge mistake in passing this bill at this time.

I think the appropriations the distinguished Senator from Alaska and I have worked together in making possible, along with the other members of our committee—I think those appropriations, which have not been signed into law by the President, some of which have not passed the other body, and most of which have been held in check by the other body at the behest of the administration—those would have given to the American people far more security than would this bill. But as to the Senator, my trust in him—as I said it before and I will say it again—is implicit. I have no doubt he intends to do the best he can to see this appropriations process goes along as the Framers and as our predecessors have intended.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the critical distinctions between the legislation as reported out by the Governmental Affairs Committee and the House passed bill, creating a Department of Homeland Security.

I think it is wise to proceed cautiously when creating a mega-Department of Homeland Security which would encompass approximately 22 agencies and involve about 170,000 employees. We all recognize that we face new threats, and we all recognize the need to better coordinate efforts to protect Americans from these threats. However, it is also critically important, as the distinguished senior Senator from West Virginia has repeatedly noted, to consider carefully what is being proposed to ensure that any legislation enhances our security and does not detract from it.

William Safire describes in Thursday's New York Times how the House proposed Homeland Security Act will create a computerized dossier on the private life of every American citizen. I urge my colleagues to read Mr. Safire's prescient column entitled, "You Are a Suspect". His arguments are one reason why we should proceed cautiously to creating a Department of Homeland Security.

The President compares the reorganization of agencies within the federal government into a new Department of Homeland Security to the creation of the Department of Defense after World War II. But the two departments that were combined to create the Department of Defense, the Department of the Army and the Department of the Navy, had the same primary mission, to defend the United States. They had similar cultures and management priorities. This is not true of the proposed new Department of Homeland Security. Many of the agencies, such as the Coast Guard, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency, have varying missions, priorities and cultures.

Any far-reaching change to the structure of the federal government demands thorough and open discussion. Senator LIEBERMAN has done a great service to his country by holding hearings and debating extensively the structure of such a department. But there needs to be further debate and amendment to the proposal offered by the Republicans.

Let me make a dozen points as to why the legislation reported out by our Governmental Affairs Committee, which was subjected to numerous public hearings, represents an improvement over legislation passed by the House last night and why the House proposal, supported by the President, is seriously flawed.

First, the House proposal raises serious concerns about the collection, use, and dissemination of private information, the issue addressed by Mr. Safire. It gives the Secretary broad access to information relating to investigations and places restrictions on the authority of the inspector general to conduct inquiries into the new department's operations. Our committee substitute corrected this oversight by creating both a strong Civil Rights Officer and a strong Chief Privacy Officer.

The privacy officer would assist the Department with the development and implementation of policies and procedures to ensure that privacy considerations and safeguards are incorporated and implemented in programs and activities, and that information is handled in a manner that minimizes the risks of harm to individuals from inappropriate disclosure. Such officers are necessary to protect Americans from encroachments on their civil liberties.

The committee-reported legislation created a powerful civil rights officer, ensuring compliance with all civil rights laws, coordinating with the administration, assisting in the development and implementation of civil rights policies, and reporting to the Inspector General on matters warranting further investigation. In contrast, the new bill just passed by the House would only require the Civil Rights Officer to review and assess alleged abuses and report to Congress. In the House bill the Secretary appoints the officer and in the Governmental Affairs committee-reported bill the President appoints and the Senate confirms the officer, ensuring greater accountability. The Committee alternative worked to ensure that civil rights were not violated in the first instance.

The threat of a "Big Brother" new department cannot be overemphasized. With the President proposing programs like the Terrorism Information and Prevention System, Operation TIPS, a national program to encourage volunteers to report suspect activities to the Department of Justice, and the Department of Defense's new "Total Information Awareness," we need strong protections against violations of Americans' privacy and civil rights. The first defense of our freedom comes from a system with checks and balances. The House proposal, supported by the President, does not contain sufficient checks and balances.

Second, under the first House-passed bill and the President's original proposal, whistleblowers were not protected. Merit Systems Protection Board, MSPB, appeal rights as well as Office of Special Counsel, OSC, enforcement were not included. I am pleased to say that under the proposal before us today, whistleblowers retain most of their rights. However, the bill does not go far enough. Due to the waiver of collective bargaining rights, third-party arbitration may not be protected for those federal employees who are union members and blow the whistle. Third party arbitration is an effective way to resolve whistle blower cases due to the hostile decisions of the Federal Circuit.

Third, the administration proposal transfers the Transportation Security Agency, TSA, into the new department. Baggage screeners are our first line of defense against terrorism on our airlines, and they need to have the same protections as our border patrol agents, INS employees, and custom inspectors so that they can come forward to disclose risks to our public health and safety. The committee's bill, as a result of an amendment offered by Senator LEVIN and myself, gave full whistleblower rights to baggage screeners and their supervisors and to contract screeners. This is something that the House proposal fails to do.

Fourth, the new administration-supported bill gives minimal assurances that non-homeland security functions in the 22 agencies to be absorbed in the new Department will be preserved and not eliminated or diminished. The committee's amendment, which I offered with Senator CARPER, required that all non-homeland security functions of each agency be identified, along with the resources needed to preserve these functions, and the additional changes needed to ensure that non-homeland security functions would not be diminished. The new proposal drops this critical reporting requirement. In fact, the new bill removes all reports to Congress which would allow Congress to monitor closely the creation of the new department and to ensure vital non-homeland security functions are preserved.

Fifth, the committee-reported bill provided critical management guidance to the development of an effective homeland security mission. Agencies need specific guidance on how to achieve success. There are over 40 federal agencies with homeland security missions—some to be within the new department but others to remain outside. For many, homeland security is a new responsibility that must be added to existing missions. Agencies will need to rationalize their new homeland security missions with their existing responsibilities. The committee's amendment provided for a process for ensuring that this occurs. The House proposal does not.

Sixth, the House-passed bill creates a new Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection with two subordinate directorates, including one for intelligence which is given extraordinary access to sensitive information, both domestic and foreign. Under the House formulation as supported by the President, the new Secretary can trump the authority of the Director of Central Intelligence. The new directorate will duplicate work already being performed by the CIA's Counter Terrorism Center. Furthermore, Section 202 of the President's bill requires all agencies to provide all information to the new Department, including information which might pertain to intelligence sources and methods, without the Secretary even having to request that information. This gives this new office unprecedented access with few checks and balances, suggesting that the new office may have the capability to intrude to an extraordinary extent into the private lives of individual American citizens. These are very worrisome developments. The new formulation risks endangering our individual, as well as our national, security. Senator THOMPSON, Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator LEVIN and I had worked out an amendment which was contained in the committee bill. This amendment should have been accepted by the President. I am deeply troubled concerning the administration's new mission for the Department's intelligence directorate.

Seventh, the latest proposal does not address the serious shortcomings across the Federal Government in communicating security threats to the public. The American people are confused and frustrated by threat advisories without direction and repeated statements by the administration that future terrorist attacks are inevitable. The committee bill ensured that the Secretary of the new Department worked with state and local officials to develop more effective alert systems, more useful warnings, and improved communication with the public and private sector. In short, the Governmental Affairs Committee's legislation would have empowered the American people to play a role in the war on terrorism.

Eighth, this new proposal transfers the Plum Island Animal Disease Center from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Homeland Security. However, many potential agriculture terrorism diseases, such as anthrax, are not studied at Plum Island. Rather than pulling off one piece of the Department of Agriculture's much needed and underappreciated laboratory network, the Governmental Affairs Committee alternative left Plum Island where it was and instead ensured coordination and consultation between the Department of Homeland Security and Agriculture on bioterrorism research priorities.

Ninth, the House proposal does not address serious shortfalls in emergency preparedness and response capabilities for agricultural terrorism. The Lieberman alternative acknowledged the importance of agriculture to our national economy and the dangers that an infectious animal or plant disease could pose to human health, rural America, and our Nation's economy. A large scale agricultural disease outbreak, whether of natural or deliberate origin, will require rapid and coordinated efforts by the Department of Agriculture, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Departments of Health and Human Services, Transportation, Defense, and Justice, and local and State emergency managers. The committee's amendment ensured that agricultural health diseases were considered in security assessments and that the animal health and agriculture communities would be included in planning, training, and response activities.

Tenth, in the name of flexibility, the President's initial proposal waived all of the provisions of title 5 leaving federal employees without protection from discrimination or whistleblower retaliations. The House proposal maintains most of title 5; however, it allows for the waiver of provisions affecting collective bargaining rights and appeal rights. One of the key factors to the so-called success of the Federal Aviation Administration, FAA, and the Internal Revenue Service, IRS, two agencies that have managerial flexibilities, is the strong role federal labor unions play in the shaping of the personnel system and in resolving employee disputes through third-party arbitration. This third-party arbitration is even more critical since cases involving coercion to participate in political activity, violations of veterans preference rights, giving unlawful preference or advantage to any employee, or other prohibited personnel practices can no longer be appealed to an independent body such as the Merit Systems Protection Board, MSPB. The personnel system at the FAA removed MSPB appeal rights in 1996 only to have them reinstated by Congress in 2000 at the urging of Federal employees and managers.

While the merit system principles are designed to ensure that Federal employment is efficient, fair, open to all, and free from political interference, the civil service rules of title 5, reinforced by collective bargaining rights, provide the framework for implementing and enforcing merit principles. Without such laws in place, the principles we all strive for cannot be reached. The Governmental Affairs Committee's reported bill preserved all of title 5, protected collective bargaining rights, and provided additional flexibilities governmentwide.

Some 25 years ago, the Civil Service Reform Act, CSRA, of 1978 responded to the same issues confronting our Government today. The act established the principles of openness and procedural justice that define the civil service today. It created the Merit Systems Protection Board and the Office of Special Counsel to protect the rights of Federal employees. The Federal Labor Relations Authority was created to oversee labor-management practices. The act provided a statutory basis for the collective bargaining rights of Federal workers. It prohibited reprisals against employees who expose government fraud, waste and abuse. Those in the Federal workforce demonstrate their loyalty and dedication not just to their employer but to their country every day. On September 11, the Federal workforce responded with courage, dedication, and sacrifice. Why is the President repaying their sacrifice by undermining their rights and our civil service by proposing these changes?

Eleventh, the House legislation fails to protect veterans by allowing the waiver of chapter 77 of title 5 relating to appeals. This would make veterans go to an agency management-operated process to challenge anti-veteran personnel actions by the same agency management. Under current law, veterans who believe that they have been denied a position or have been subject to a "designer" Reduction-In-Force, RIF, action in violation of veterans' preference requirements can challenge such wrongful actions through the Merit Systems Protection Board or through a union grievance procedure. This will no longer be possible under the House bill. The Committee's bill would have preserved MSPB review of veterans' preference complaints. Ironically, as we are in the midst of a war on terrorism and have authorized a war against Iraq, the Administration is weakening veterans' preference rights. This is fundamentally wrong.

Twelfth, the House proposal and the Governmental Affairs Committee-reported bill include provisions protecting the confidential sharing of critical infrastructure information. With cyber attacks on the rise, government and industry leaders have been seeking a way to facilitate the sharing of information related to cyber vulnerabilities and attacks. Sharing such information is important because 85 percent of the Nation's infrastructure is controlled by private utility, telecommunications, or other similar companies. Despite the need to facilitate information sharing, I question the extent to which such information will be protected and the impact of such protections on environmental and public health laws.

In general, the owners and operators of critical infrastructure are concerned about the type and scope of information they are being asked to submit to the government. This data deals with vulnerabilities, incidents, and remedies which, if made available to business competitors or to the general public, could compromise their competitive position, expose them to liability, disclose sensitive information to terrorists and others who might wish to disrupt the function of their infrastructure, or harm their public relations.

However, current law provides adequate protection to the private sector for disclosing this type of information to the Federal Government. Nonetheless, industry has expressed its concern over non-binding case law that could be overturned. As such, the Governmental Affairs Committee bill provided a narrow exception to the Freedom of Information Act which closely follows current law. This provision was designed to facilitate the sharing of information with the Federal Government, while at the same time providing citizens with necessary information on public health and environmental issues. The Committee bill was careful not to provide an inadvertent safe harbor for those who violate Federal health and safety statutes.

For these reasons, I believe that the Governmental Affairs Committee's legislation offered a more effective approach to guarding homeland security than the proposal advocated by the President who recently stated that "our job—our government's greatest responsibility is to protect the American people." I agree with the President, but I do not agree that by voting for the President's flawed proposal we will be adequately protecting the American people.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I would like to commend Senator CORZINE for his efforts to address the serious issue of chemical site security. The Chemical Security Act, S. 1602, which I cosponsored, would require "high priority" facilities to improve security and reduce hazards. The bipartisan and strong support for this issue was demonstrated last July when the bill unanimously passed the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee.

Across the country, thousands of industrial facilities use dangerous chemicals in amounts that could endanger nearby communities if the facilities were attacked by terrorists. According to the Environmental Protection Agency's Risk Management Planning program, there are 123 facilities where a release of chemicals could threaten more than 1 million people. There are also more than 700 facilities from which a chemical release could threaten more than 100,000 residential neighbors. Yet there is no Federal security standard for chemical facilities, no Federal guidelines on facility proximity to neighboring communities, and no Federal agency overseeing the operations and safety of these facilities.

This bill is not intended to address chemical accidents. The Clean Air Act already provides existing authority. However, a review of the chemical accident data provides clear insight into the dangers associated with chemical releases from these facilities. Federal data suggests that in 1998 there were almost 50,000 incidents—fires, spills and explosions—over 100 deaths, and nearly 5,000 injuries, related to chemical industrial accidents in the United States. Some analysts suggest that for each catastrophic chemical accident that causes a fatality, there are 300 recordable incidents and 30,000 near misses. One estimate suggests that U.S. chemical accidents cost about $15 billion a year.

In 1999, Congress required the Department of Justice to issue, within 3 years, a report to Congress on the vulnerability of chemical facilities to criminal and terrorist activity. For over a year, the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee has been asking for this report. Beyond a very thin and useless preliminary draft, the administration has not complied with this requirement of the Clean Air Act amendments. The Justice Department claims that funding constraints have impacted their work. This excuse is completely unacceptable, as is the administration's delay in addressing what may be this Nation's biggest terrorist vulnerability. Three years ago, Congress recognized the potential risks to our Nation's chemical security. Not 1 more year or month should pass with this issue unresolved.

Press reports highlight the public's frustration. In September, Newsweek reported a failing grade to the Federal Government in protecting chemical plants and other hazardous materials. I believe the article accurately described the forces blocking action: "industry lobbyists and infighting among a multitude of government agencies trying to defend their turf have combined to hold (Governor) Ridge's office and the Environmental Protection Agency at bay."

I ask my colleague to step beyond bureaucratic delays and special interest pressures to think of the families that could be impacted by our inaction here today. We must act on this issue as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCHUMER). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I extend my appreciation to the Senator from Iowa who has other things to do, but he has agreed to be here for a few minutes.

NOMINATION OF JOHN M. ROGERS

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, last night, the Senate voted to confirm the nomination of John Rogers who is nominated to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. By confirming this nomination, we are trying to move forward in providing help to the Sixth Circuit. Earlier this year, we held a hearing for Judge Julia Gibbons to a seat on the Sixth Circuit, who was confirmed by the Senate on July 29, 2002 by a vote of 95 to 0. With last night's vote, the Democratic-led Senate confirmed the 15th judge to our Federal Courts of Appeal and our 98th judicial nominee since the change in Senate majority in July 2001. I have placed a separate statement in the RECORD on the occasion of confirming that many of this President's judicial nominees in just 16 months.

Republicans often say that almost half of the seats on the Sixth Circuit are vacant but what they fail to acknowledge is that most of those vacancies arose during the Clinton Administration and before the change in majority last summer. None, zero, not one of the Clinton nominees to those current vacancies on the Sixth Circuit received a hearing by the Judiciary Committee under Republican leadership. With the confirmation of Professor Rogers, we have reduced the number of vacancies on that court to six, but four of those remaining lack home-State consent due to the President's failure to address the legitimate concerns of Senators in that circuit whose nominees were blocked by Republicans during the period of Republican control of the Senate.

The Sixth Circuit vacancies are a prime and unfortunate legacy of the past partisan obstructionist practices under Republican leadership. Vacancies on the Sixth Circuit were perpetuated during the last several years of the Clinton administration when the Republican majority refused to hold hearings on the nominations of Judge Helene White, Kathleen McCree Lewis and Professor Kent Markus to vacancies in the Sixth Circuit.

One of those seats has been vacant since 1995, the first term of President Clinton. Judge Helene White of the Michigan Court of Appeals was nominated in January 1997 and did not receive a hearing on her nomination during the more than 1,500 days before her nomination was withdrawn by President Bush in March of last year. Judge White's nomination may have set an unfortunate record.

Her nomination was pending without a hearing for more over 4 years—51 months. She was first nominated in January 1997 and renominated and renominated through March of last year when President Bush chose to withdraw her nomination. Under Republican control, the committee averaged hearings on only about eight Courts of Appeals nominees a year and, in 2000, held only five hearings on Courts of Appeals nominees all year.

In contrast, Professor Rogers was the fifteenth Court of Appeals nominee of President Bush to receive a hearing by the committee in less than a year since the reorganization of the Senate Judiciary Committee. In 16 months we held hearings on 20 circuit court nominations. Professor Rogers was being treated much better than Kathleen McCree Lewis, a distinguished African American lawyer from a prestigious Michigan law firm. She never had a hearing on her 1999 nomination to the Sixth Circuit during the years it was pending before it was withdrawn by President Bush in March 2001.

Professor Kent Markus, another outstanding nominee to a vacancy on the Sixth Circuit that arose in 1999, never received a hearing on his nomination before his nomination was returned to President Clinton without action in December 2000. While Professor Markus' nomination was pending, his confirmation was supported by individuals of every political stripe, including 14 past presidents of the Ohio State Bar Association and more than 80 Ohio law school deans and professors.

Others who supported Professor Markus include prominent Ohio Republicans, including Ohio Supreme Court Chief Justice Thomas Moyer, Ohio Supreme Court Justice Evelyn Stratton, Congresswoman DEBORAH PRYCE, and Congressman DAVID HOBSON, the National District Attorneys Association, and virtually every major newspaper in the state.

In his testimony to the Senate in May, Professor Markus summarized his experience as a federal judicial nominee, demonstrating how the "history regarding the current vacancy backlog is being obscured by some." Here are some of things he said:

> On February 9, 2000, I was the President's first judicial nominee in that calendar year. And then the waiting began. . . .
>
> At the time my nomination was pending, despite lower vacancy rates than the 6th Circuit, in calendar year 2000, the Senate confirmed circuit nominees to the 3rd, 9th and Federal Circuits. . . . No 6th circuit nominee had been afforded a hearing in the prior two years. Of the nominees awaiting a Judiciary Committee hearing, there was no circuit with more nominees than the 6th Circuit.
>
> With high vacancies already impacting the 6th Circuit's performance, and more vacancies on the way, why, then, did my nomination expire without even a hearing? To their credit, Senator DEWINE and his staff and Senator HATCH's staff and others close to him were straight with me.
>
> Over and over again they told me two things: (1) There will be no more confirmations to the 6th Circuit during the Clinton Administration[.] (2) This has nothing to do with you; don't take it personally it doesn't matter who the nominee is, what credentials they may have or what support they may have—see item number 1. . . . The fact was, a decision had been made to hold the vacancies and see who won the presidential election. With a Bush win, all those seats could go to Bush rather than Clinton nominees.

As Professor Markus identified, some on the other side of the aisle held these seats open for years for another President to fill, instead of proceeding fairly on the consensus nominees pending before the Senate. Some were unwilling to move forward, knowing that retirements and attrition would create four additional seats that would arise naturally for the next President. That is why there are now so many vacancies on the Sixth Circuit.

Had Republicans not blocked President Clinton's nominees to this court, if the three Democratic nominees had been confirmed and President Bush appointed the judges to the other vacancies on the Sixth Circuit, that court would be almost evenly balanced between judges appointed by Republicans and Democrats. That is what Republican obstruction was designed to avoid, balance. The same is true of a number of other circuits, with Republicans benefitting from their obstructionist practices of the preceding six and a half years. This combined with President Bush's refusal to consult with Democratic Senators about these matters is particularly troubling.

Long before some of the recent voices of concern were raised about the vacancies on that court, Democratic Senators in 1997, 1998, 1999, and 2000 implored the Republican majority to give the Sixth Circuit nominees hearings. Those requests, made not just for the sake of the nominees but for the sake of the public's business before the court, were ignored. Numerous articles and editorials urged the Republican leadership to act on those nominations.

Fourteen former presidents of the Michigan State Bar pleaded for hearings on those nominations. The former Chief Judge of the Sixth Circuit, Judge Gilbert Merritt, wrote to the Judiciary Committee Chairman years ago to ask that the nominees get hearings and that the vacancies be filled. The Chief Judge noted that, with four vacancies—the four vacancies that arose in the Clinton administration the Sixth Circuit "is hurting badly and will not be able to keep up with its work load due to the fact that the Senate Judiciary Committee has acted on none of the nominations to our Court." He predicted: "By the time the next President is inaugurated, there will be six vacancies on the Court of Appeals. Almost half of the Court will be vacant and will remain so for most of 2001 due to the exigencies of the nomination process. Although the President has nominated candidates, the Senate has refused to take a vote on any of them."

However, no Sixth Circuit hearings were held in the last three full years of the Clinton administration—almost his entire second presidential term—despite these pleas. Not one. Since the shift in majority last summer, the situation has been exacerbated further as two additional vacancies have arisen.

The committee's April 25th hearing on the nomination of Judge Gibbons to the Sixth Circuit was the first hearing on a Sixth Circuit nomination in almost 5 years, even though three outstanding, fair-minded individuals were nominated to the Sixth Circuit by President Clinton and pending before the Committee for anywhere from one year to over four years. Judge Gibbons was confirmed by the Senate on July 29, 2002, by a vote of 95 to 0. We did not stop there, but proceeded to hold a hearing on a second Sixth Circuit nominee, Professor Rogers, just a few short months later in June.

Just as we held the first hearing on a Sixth Circuit nominee in many years, the hearing we held on the nomination of Judge Edith Clement to the Fifth Circuit last year was the first on a Fifth Circuit nominee in seven years and she was the first new appellate judge confirmed to that Court in six years.

When we held a hearing on the nomination of Judge Harris Hartz to the Tenth Circuit last year, it was the first hearing on a Tenth Circuit nominee in six years and he was the first new appellate judge confirmed to that Court in 6 years. When we held the hearing on the nomination of Judge Roger Gregory to the Fourth Circuit last year, it was the first hearing on a Fourth Circuit nominee in three years and he was the first appellate judge confirmed to that court in three years.

A number of vacancies continue to exist on many Courts of Appeals, in large measure because the recent Republican majority was not willing to hold hearings or vote on half—56 percent—of President Clinton's Courts of Appeals nominees in 1999 and 2000 and was not willing to confirm a single judge to the Courts of Appeals during the entire 1996 session.

From the time the Republicans took over the Senate in 1995 until the reorganization of the committee last July, circuit vacancies increased from 16 to 33, more than doubling. Democrats have broken with that recent history of inaction. In the last 16 months, we have held 26 judicial nominations hearing, including 20 hearings for circuit court nominees.

Professor Roger's nomination was also the fourth judicial nomination from Kentucky to be considered by the committee in its first year, and the eighth nomination from Kentucky overall. There are no judicial vacancies left in the State.

Professor Rogers of the University of Kentucky College of Law has experience as an appellate litigator and a teacher, and is a prolific author on a number of difficult legal topics. It is important to note that aspects of his record raise concerns. As a professor, he has been a strong proponent of judicial activism. No Clinton judicial nominee with such published views would ever have been confirmed during the period of Republican control. In his writings, Professor Rogers has called on lower court judges to reverse higher court precedents, if the lower court judge thinks the higher court will ultimate reverse its own precedent. Such an activist approach is inappropriate in the lower federal courts. The Supreme Court itself has noted that lower courts should follow Supreme Court precedent and not anticipate future decisions in which the Supreme Court may exercise its prerogative to overrule itself.

Prognostications about how the Supreme Court will rule often turns out to be wrong. For example, some predicted that the Supreme Court would overturn Miranda, but the Supreme Court, in an opinion by Chief Justice Rehnquist, declined to do so. Similarly, people like Professor Rogers have called on the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade, but thus far the Supreme Court has rejected calls to reverse itself in this important decision regarding the rights of women and has resisted calls to return this country to the awful period of dangerous back alley abortions.

Professor Rogers also suggested in his academic writings that lower court judges should consider the political views of Justices in making the determination of when lower courts should overrule Supreme Court precedent. In his answers to the committee, Professor Rogers acknowledged that he had taken that position but he now says that lower courts should not look to the views of Justices expressed in speeches or settings other than their opinions. Also, in his answers to the committee, Professor Rogers said he would give great weight to Supreme Court dicta, or arguments that are not part of the holding of the case. I would like to take this opportunity to urge him to take seriously the obligation of a judge to follow precedent and the holdings of the Supreme Court, rather than to look to dicta for views that may support his own personal views. I would also urge him resist acting on his academic notion that a judge should diverge from precedent when he anticipates that the Supreme Court may eventually do so.

Professor Rogers has assured us that he would follow precedent and not overrule higher courts, despite his clear advocacy of that position in his writings as a scholar. He has sworn under oath that he would not follow the approach that he long advocated. As with President Bush's Eighth Circuit nominee Lavenski Smith, who was confirmed earlier this summer, I am hopeful that Professor Rogers will be a person of his word: that he will follow the law and not seek out opportunities to overturn precedent or decide cases in accord with his private beliefs rather than his obligations as a judge.

I would also note that during his tenure at the Justice Department, Professor Rogers appeared to support an expansive view of the power of the executive branch vis-a-vis Congress. I am hopeful, however, that Professor Rogers will recognize the important difference between being a zealous advocate for such positions and being a fair and impartial judge sworn to follow precedents and the law.

When he was asked to describe any work he had handled which was not popular but was nevertheless important, he said that the case which came to mind was one in which he defended the CIA against a lawsuit seeking damages for the CIA's illegal opening of the private mail of tens of thousands of U.S. citizens during this 1970s or 1980s. Those were dark days of overreaching by the intelligence community against the rights of ordinary law-abiding American citizens. Although times have changed forever since the tragic events of September 11, I think it is important that the American people have access to judges who will uphold the Constitution against government excesses while also giving acts of Congress the presumption of constitutionality to which our laws are entitled by precedent.

Professor Rogers has repeatedly assured the committee, however, that he would follow precedent and not seek to overturn decisions affecting the privacy of women or any other decision of the Supreme Court. Senator McCONNELL has also personally assured me that Professor Rogers will not be an activist but is sincerely committed to following precedent if he is confirmed. I sincerely hope that his decisions on the Sixth Circuit do not prove us wrong.

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I am particularly pleased today to speak in support of the confirmation of John M. Rogers to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. As we know, there is a judicial vacancy crisis in the Sixth Circuit and the addition of Mr. ROGERS to the bench represents a positive step in alleviating that regrettable situation.

John M. Rogers is currently the Thomas P. Lewis Professor at the University of Kentucky College of Law, where he has taught since 1978. He is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Stanford University and an Order of the Coif graduate of the University of Michigan Law School, where he served on the Michigan Law Review. He is an expert in international, administrative, and constitutional law and a respected teacher and scholar.

Prior to teaching, Professor Rogers was an appellate attorney in the Civil Division of the United States Department of Justice. This work, and a later stint at DOJ, led to his being awarded a Special Commendation for Outstanding Service to the Civil Division of the U.S. Department of Justice. Rogers has twice been a Fulbright Senior Lecturer in the People's Republic of China, and is a member of the Council on Foreign Relations. He has also served this country for 28 years as a reserve officer in the U.S. Army Reserve and the Kentucky Army National Guard.

All of these accomplishments and contributions explain why the American Bar Association has rated Professor Rogers unanimously qualified. I agree with that judgment, I applaud President Bush for making this nomination, and I urge all of my colleagues to confirm Professor Rogers to the Sixth Circuit. I am confident he will serve with distinction as a Federal judge.

NOMINATIONS OF U.S. DISTRICT COURT NOMINEES

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I rise in support of the fine group of district court nominees who are being confirmed tonight. I have reviewed their individual records and I find all of them to be excellent choices for the Federal bench. Permit me a moment to highlight the merits of each nominee.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Stanley R. Chesler, our nominee to the District Court for the District of New Jersey, received his undergraduate degree from Harpur College. He then went on to do graduate work at Brooklyn College where he accumulated 30 graduate credits in education. While working as teacher during the day, he graduated magna cum laude and first in his class from St. John's University School of Law, receiving no less than 12 American Jurisprudence Awards and consistently making the dean's list.

Upon graduation, Magistrate Judge Chesler joined the Bronx District Attorney's Office and specialized in prosecuting public corruption, organized crime, narcotics and fraud cases. In 1980 he became a Special Attorney for the U.S. Department of Justice's Newark Organized Crime Strike Force, before becoming an Assistant United States Attorney. During his career at the Department of Justice, he was awarded the Special Commendation Award and the Special Achievement Award. The nominee was then appointed by the New Jersey District Court judges to the office of Magistrate Judge in 1987. Magistrate Judge Chesler has also been recognized by his colleagues in receiving an ABA rating of Unanimously Well Qualified.

Rosemary Collyer, our nominee to the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, is a graduate of the University of Denver School of Law. She began her career at the Denver firm of Sherman & Howard as an associate in the labor and employment law group. Four years later she was nominated by President Reagan and confirmed by the Senate to be the Chairman of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission, which reviews decisions of specialized administrative law judges who adjudicate cases dealing with mine safety, health and discrimination claims under Federal law.

In 1984 Ms. Collyer was nominated by President Reagan and confirmed by the Senate to be General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board. In this capacity, she served as the nationwide prosecutor of labor law violations, overseeing election processes, representing the NLRB before State and Federal courts, and overseeing agency personnel and budget matters. Since 1989, Ms. Collyer has been a partner at Crowell & Moring in Washington, D.C. Her specialization has been in labor law and employment law.

A July 22, 2002 Legal Times article reported that Ms. Collyer is "well-regarded by her fellow labor lawyers." One colleague asserted, "She cares about getting it right. She is definitely capable of navigating complex cases." Another stated that during her time of government service, "she was an oasis of perceived neutrality. She pandered to no one." These are traits that will undoubtedly serve Ms. Collyer well upon her confirmation to the Federal bench.

Mark E. Fuller, nominated to be a U.S. District Court Judge for the Middle District of Alabama, is an excellent choice for the federal bench. After graduating from the University of Alabama School of Law in 1985, Mr. Fuller joined the firm of Cassady, Fuller & Marsh, a small litigation firm specializing in all aspects of state and federal practice in rural southeast Alabama. He became a partner in 1986 and remained with the firm until 1996, handling insurance and corporate defense work, and domestic relations, real estate, and corporate law matters.

From 1987 to 1992 and from 1995 to 1996, Mr. Fuller worked as a part-time Assistant District Attorney. In 1996 Mr. Fuller accepted the position of Chief Assistant District Attorney for Alabama's Twelfth Judicial Circuit, serving there until 1997, when he was appointed District Attorney in the same office. While working in the District Attorney's office, Mr. Fuller has represented the people of Pike and Coffee counties in criminal cases, including capital murder trials and juvenile and district court matters. In 1998 Mr. Fuller was elected to a full six-year term as District Attorney. He oversees the operations of the office and continues to handle criminal jury trials.

Daniel Hovland, nominated to the District Court for the District of North Dakota, promises to be an excellent federal judge. Upon graduation from the University of North Dakota School of Law, he served as a law clerk to the Honorable Ralph J. Erickstad on the North Dakota Supreme Court. He then accepted a position with the Office of the Attorney General for North Dakota, working as an Assistant Attorney General and acting as Director of the Consumer Fraud Division from 1980 to 1983.

From there he moved into private practice, working with Fleck Mather & Strutz from 1983 to 1994 and Smith Bakke Hovland & Oppegard from 1994 to the present. As a trial lawyer, Mr. Hovland handles personal injury, wrongful death, medical malpractice, employment/labor, and product liability cases. While in private practice, Mr. Hovland has gained experience particularly helpful for the federal bench. Since 1994 he has served as an Administrative Law Judge for North Dakota's Office of Administrative Hearings, he currently serves on the North Dakota Parole Board, and he has experience with mediation and arbitration.

Kent A. Jordan, who has been nominated to the U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware, comes fully recommended by Senators BIDEN and CARPER, and I urge my colleagues to support him as well.

Mr. Jordan possesses the experience needed for handling the court's heavy caseload of intellectual property, government corruption, and corporate matters. Following graduation from Georgetown University Law Center in 1984, he served as a law clerk to the Honorable James L. Latchum, judge on the U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware. He then worked in private practice with a Wilmington, Delaware, firm, focusing on corporate and commercial litigation. From 1987 to 1992, Mr. Jordan worked in public service as an Assistant U.S. Attorney for the District of Delaware, advancing to become lead attorney on many civil and criminal issues.

Mr. Jordan currently works as a Vice President and General Counsel for the Corporation Service Company, which provides registered agent, public records filing and retrieval, corporate and intellectual property information management, and litigation information management services.

James E. Kinkeade, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Texas, is a graduate of Baylor University School of Law. Judge Kinkeade began work as a law clerk and then associate for Brewer & Price in Irving, Texas. One year later he became a partner at Power & Kinkeade Law Firm. He represented a large number of closely held businesses and acted as local counsel for several national corporations. In addition, he had an active domestic relations and criminal practice. Judge Kinkeade served as an Associate Municipal Judge for the City of Irving from 1976–1980.

Judge Kinkeade stopped practicing law in January of 1981 to become a judge for the County Criminal Court in Dallas, Texas. In fall of 1981, he became a judge for the 194th District Court of Texas. Since 1988, Judge Kinkeade has served on the State of Texas, 5th District Court of Appeals. In addition, Judge Kinkeade has served as an adjunct professor for over 10 years at the Texas Wesleyan School of Law. He received the Outstanding Adjunct Professor award four times while teaching Professional Responsibility.

Judge Robert Gary Klausner, who has been nominated to the District Court for the Central District of California, graduated from Loyola Law School (Los Angeles) in 1967. Though awarded a merit scholarship by Loyola he supported himself as a gas station attendant. Upon graduation, he commenced his service as an active duty officer in the U.S. Army, rising to the rank of Captain and receiving the Bronze Star.

After leaving the Army, Judge Klausner worked as a Deputy District Attorney for Los Angeles County. In 1974, he became Court Commissioner to the Pasadena Municipal Court for 6 years. In 1980, he became a Judge to that Court. Judge Klausner then left the Pasadena Municipal Court to become a Judge for the Los Angeles Superior Court. He has been with the Los Angeles Superior Court for the last 17 years. This nominee's life has been dedicated to the people of California and I cannot urge the Senate enough to confirm this well-qualified and well-deserving nominee.

Our nominee to the District of New Jersey, Judge Robert Byron Kugler, graduated from Rutgers, Camden Law School and then clerked for the Honorable John F. Gerry of the United States District Court in Camden, New Jersey. In 1979, he was appointed Assistant Camden County Prosecutor and then one year later he was appointed Deputy Attorney General for the New Jersey Department of Law and Public Safety. In these positions, he prosecuted criminal cases brought by county and/or State law enforcement agencies. As a prosecutor, Judge Kugler tried over 30 cases to jury verdict and over 100 cases to verdict in bench trials.

In 1982 Judge Kugler entered private practice and focused on matters of civil and criminal litigation. While in private practice, he tried as sole counsel to verdict over 50 cases. Before becoming a Magistrate Judge, Judge Kugler qualified for appointment by the New Jersey Supreme Court as a Certified Trial Attorney and Certified Civil Trial Attorney. Since 1992, Judge Kugler has been a United States Magistrate Judge in the District Court for the District of New Jersey. In January of 2002, the Camden County Bar Association presented its most prestigious award, the Peter J. Devine Award, to Judge Kugler and his wife for their service to the community and bar.

Ronald B. Leighton, who has been nominated to the U.S. District Court in the Western District of Washington, is a highly experienced and respected federal trial attorney. Upon graduation from UC—Hastings College of Law, Mr.

Leighton clerked for the Honorable Frank Richardson of the California Supreme Court. He then joined the Tacoma, WA, firm of Gordon, Thomas, Honeywell, Malanca, Peterson & Daheim, becoming a partner in 1978. He has remained with the same firm to the present day, working as a trial attorney with emphasis on complex litigation in Federal court.

Mr. Leighton's excellence as a litigator has not gone unrecognized. Among other honors, he is a member of the American College of Trial Attorneys, the American Board of Trial Advocates, the International Association of Defense Counsel, and the International Society of Barristers. He has represented clients on both sides of the docket.

Mr. Leighton was nominated by President George H.W. Bush to the same position in the spring of 1992, but the Democrat-controlled Judiciary Committee did not grant him a hearing. I am pleased that we can finally vote Mr. Leighton to the federal court, and I urge my colleagues to join me in my support.

Nominated to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey, Judge Jose Luis Linares immigrated to the United States from Cuba when he was 12 years old. He received his undergraduate degree from Jersey City State University in 1975, where he was a member of the National Honor Society. He then graduated from Temple Law School in 1978. During his studies at Temple, he was on the Dean's List for 2 years and was the recipient of the that law school's Barristers' Society Award for Excellence in Trial Advocacy.

Judge Linares started his career with the New York Department of Investigation, where he supervised white-collar crime and corruption investigations in the City of New York. Later, as an attorney at Horowitz, Bross, Sinnins & Imperial, P.A., he was responsible for the preparation and trial of both civil and criminal cases. In 1982, Judge Linares started his own law firm, litigating both civil and criminal cases with a focus on complex medical malpractice and product liability cases. After 18 years as a partner in his own firm, in its many incarnations, he was appointed as a Judge to the New Jersey Superior Court in Essex County. He currently oversees complex medical malpractice cases in the Civil Division of the court. His fellow attorney's are quite impressed with his record as well. He has received the highest rating by the ABA, unanimously Well Qualified. I am proud to say that I will vote for this nominee and I recommend him without reservation to the Senate.

Nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Texas, Judge Alia Moses Ludlum, graduated from the University of Texas School of Law in 1986. She continued her law school job as a law clerk in the Travis County Attorney's Office, where she eventually was promoted to Assistant County Attorney. She held a variety of positions in the office, first as Intake Attorney, then as Trial Attorney, and ultimately as Chief of the office's Appellate Division. Her primary responsibility as an Assistant County Attorney was the prosecution of criminal cases at the trial and appellate levels. She also handled all civil expunction suits and some mental health commitment cases, and represented battered spouses in protective order proceedings.

After 4 years at the County Attorney's Office, Judge Ludlum was hired to work as the sole resident AUSA in the Del Rio Division of the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of Texas. She was eventually elevated to the position of Senior Litigation Attorney, then promoted to Chief of the Del Rio Division. As an AUSA, Judge Ludlum prosecuted an average of 125 felony criminal case per year. In 1997, Judge Ludlum became a part-time magistrate judge for the Western District of Texas, Del Rio Division. She assumed that position on a full-time basis in 2000.

William J. Martini, who has been nominated to the U.S. District Court for the District of New Jersey, has solid prosecutorial and private practice experience, as well as congressional service all of which will serve him well on the federal bench.

A graduate of Rutgers School of Law, Mr. Martini served as a law clerk for the Superior Court of New Jersey, before working as an assistant prosecutor in the Hudson County (New Jersey) Prosecutor's Office. He then took a position as an assistant U.S. Attorney in the U.S. Attorney's Office in Newark, NJ, where he tried a dozen criminal jury trials to completion. Beginning in 1977, Mr. Martini worked as a sole practitioner, initially representing criminal defendants and later branching out into civil litigation, including plaintiff's personal injury suits and commercial contract matters. Following a term serving the people of New Jersey in the House of Representatives, he joined Sills Cummis Radin Tischman Epstein and Gross as partner, focusing on governmental affairs/regulatory law and general litigation.

Magistrate Judge Thomas Wade Phillips, nominated to the District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee, received his undergraduate degree from Berea College in 1965. After college, he attended Vanderbilt University School of Law on a full academic scholarship. In law school he was an assistant articles editor for the law review and was the recipient of the Dean's Award for Best Senior Dissertation. After graduation, he was commissioned into the United States Army, Judge Advocate General Corps, where he received a Appellate Advocacy Award, Government Appellate Division, in 1973. During that same year, he retired from the military and earned an LL.M. in Labor Law from George Washington University Law School.

Entering private practice, he was an associate at two firms, before becoming a partner at the firm of Baker, Worthington, Cossley, Stansberry & Woolf. During this period, he was elected to and served for nearly fifteen years as the county attorney for Scott County. From 1977 to 1986 he was a partner at two different firms. In 1986, Magistrate Judge Phillips became a Senior Partner in the firm of Phillips and Williams. He held this position until 1991 when he was appointed United States Magistrate Judge for the Eastern District of Tennessee. On October 17, 2000, he was appointed Chief United States Magistrate Judge for the Eastern District of Tennessee. He continues to serve in this capacity. The ABA has given him their highest rating of Unanimously Well Qualified.

Upon graduation from Drake University Law School, Judge Linda Reade, nominated to the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Iowa, became an associate with a Des Moines area law firm where she worked on litigation involving federal and state civil law. In 1981, she moved to the Des Moines firm of Rosenberg and Margulies, where she worked for three years litigating federal and state, and civil and criminal law.

From 1984 to 1986, Judge Reade worked on both federal and state, and civil and criminal cases as a partner in that firm. In 1986, she became an Assistant United States Attorney for the Southern District of Iowa. In 1990, she was promoted to Chief of the General Criminal Division in the United States Attorney's Office for the Southern District of Iowa. Since 1993, Judge Reade has served as a general jurisdiction State District Court Judge in Des Moines, Iowa, where she has maintained a low reversal rate. She has also lectured on civil procedure and trial practice (1995–2000) and taught trial practice for two semesters at Drake University Law School (1988 and 1990). Judge Reade is well prepared to serve as a district court judge.

William E. Smith, who has been nominated to the U.S. District Court for the District of Rhode Island, joined Edwards & Angell, LLP, right after law school, and he is a member of the firm's labor, employment, and litigation departments. His practice has included representing management in union contract negotiations, union organizing drives, arbitration proceedings, employment discrimination matters, sexual harassment, wage and hour law, OSHA, OFCCP compliance and investigations, and other Department of Labor investigations.

While at his firm, in 1993, Mr. Smith successfully competed to become City

Solicitor of Warwick, Rhode Island (under Mayor Lincoln Chafee). As such, he led a team of lawyers who took over all of the city's legal work for a fixed fee. He was also retained that year to be legal counsel to the Rhode Island Secretary of State, performing labor, employment and other matters. In 1994, he was hired by the Rhode Island Department of Administration as outside labor-litigation counsel for a number of arbitration cases. He also worked for the Rhode Island courts during an organizing drive of clerical employees and a restructuring of the court system and as a judge on the municipal court for 4½ years. Mr. Smith has since returned to private practice with Edwards & Angell.

Jeffery Steven White, who has been nominated to the Northern District of California, is a prime example of the high quality attorneys that President Bush has nominated to the Federal bench. He received his undergraduate degree from Queens College of the City University of New York in 1977. He then graduated magna cum laude from the State University of New York, Buffalo's School of Law in 1980. During his studies at SUNY Buffalo, he was a Research Editor of the Law Review and graduated first in his class.

Upon graduation, Mr. White became a Trial Attorney for the U.S. Department of Justice, Criminal Division—Management/Labor Section. In 1971 he joined the U.S. Attorney Office for the District of Maryland as an Assistant U.S. Attorney. During his tenure at this position, he was designated as an outstanding Assistant United States Attorney in 1974 and 1976. He then returned to the Department of Justice in 1977 to work as a Senior Grade Trial Attorney in the Public Integrity Section of the Criminal Division. In 1978, Mr. White began a 24 year association with the law firm of Orrick, Herrington & Sutciffe. He quickly rose to become Chairman of the firm's Litigation Department, a position that he held from 1985 to 2000.

Freda L. Wolfson, who has been nominated to the District Court for the District of New Jersey, is a great choice for the federal court. Upon graduation from Rutgers University School of Law, Judge Wolfson was a litigation associate at Lowenstein, Sandler, Kohl, Fisher & Boylan. Her practice mostly involved commercial litigation and employment litigation. She also represented a habeas corpus petitioner in federal court and represented several criminal defendants as pro bono counsel.

From 1981–1986, she was a litigation associate at Clapp & Eisenberg where she focused on commercial litigation, employment litigation, and defense of ski areas. In addition, she frequently appeared before the New Jersey Casino Control Commission. In 1986, Judge Wolfson was appointed a United States Magistrate Judge, District of New Jersey. Since 1990, she has presided over 32 civil trials, 18 jury trials, and 14 bench trials. She has served on the Third Circuit's Task Force for Indigent Litigants in Civil Cases since 1998.

I am proud to support all of these nominees. They have excellent educational backgrounds, they have terrific legal experience, and they have the temperament to excel on the bench. I urge my colleagues to join me in my unqualified support.

NOMINATION OF JUDGE THOMAS PHILLIPS

Mr. THOMPSON. Madam President, I am very pleased that the Senate is taking up the nomination of judge Thomas Phillips, who is the President's nominee to fill a vacancy on the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Tennessee.

Judge Phillips was born and raised in Scott County, TN, the home county of our former colleague, Senator Howard Baker. His academic record is superb. A Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Berea College in Kentucky, he went on to attend Vanderbilt Law School, my own alma mater, on a full academic scholarship. While at Vanderbilt, he was an editor of the Law Review and received the Dean's Award for Best Senior Dissertation.

Upon finishing law school, Judge Phillips joined the Army Judge Advocate General's Corps, which awarded him its Outstanding Appellate Advocacy Award and the Army Commendation Medal in 1973. While serving in the Army, Judge Phillips also received a master of laws degree from George Washington University Law School here in Washington.

In 1973, Judge Phillips returned to Tennessee and entered the private practice of law. Public service called him back, however, and in 1976, Judge Phillips was elected as County Attorney for Scott County. Between 1976 and 1991, Judge Phillips continued to serve as Scott County Attorney, being reelected four times, while continuing to engage in private law practice with his own firm in his home town, Oneida. During this period, he tried hundreds of cases.

In 1991, Judge Phillips was appointed by the judges of the Eastern District of Tennessee to serve as a Magistrate Judge in Knoxville, the position he continues to hold. During the time he has served as Magistrate Judge, he has earned the respect of all who have appeared before him for his demeanor, courtesy, and intellect. During the rigorous screening process that Senator FRIST and I undertook to review the records of interested candidates for this judgeship, we heard uniformly and highly favorable comments about Judge Phillips.

I think the record before the committee demonstrates his outstanding qualifications. I cite just one example. In over 11 years on the bench, out of thousands of decisions and recommendations, Judge Phillips has been reversed on just two occasions, and on only one occasion has a District Judge rejected his recommendations.

Judge Phillips has excelled not only in his professional career, but in his commitment to his community as well. He has promoted legal education by serving as a member of the Inns of Court and by teaching at the University of Tennessee Law School. He is an Elder of the Huntsville Presbyterian Church, a member of the American Legion, and a leader of the American, Tennessee, Scott County, and Knoxville Bar Associations. In private practice, Judge Phillips provided extensive pro bono services and served on the boards of Scott County Hospital and Opportunities for the Handicapped.

I would be remiss if I failed to note the importance of moving forward with this nomination. Traditionally, two district judges sit in Knoxville, Tennessee's third largest city. Late last year and early this year, Judge Jordan and Judge Jarvis respectively assumed senior status, leaving the district court in Knoxville with no active judges. I want to express my thanks and appreciation to both senior judges for the service they rendered for many years on the Federal bench in Knoxville.

I am confident that there is no one better qualified to fill the large hold left by Judge Jordan and Judge Jarvis than Judge Phillips. I am pleased to endorse Judge Phillips and urge my colleagues to support his nomination.

S. 1742

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

[SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

[This Act may be cited as the "Restore Your Identity Act of 2001".

[SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

[Congress finds that—

[(1) the crime of identity theft is the fastest growing crime in the United States;

[(2) the Federal Trade Commission reports that between March and June of 2001, the total number of identity theft victims in the Commission's Complaint Clearinghouse System, tallied from November 1999, increased from 45,593 to 69,370;

[(3) consumer inquiries and complaints to the Federal Trade Commission Identity Theft Hotline increased from 68,000 to over 97,000 over the same 3-month period, and consumer calls into the Hotline increased in the same period from 1,800 calls per week to over 2,000;

[(4) the Federal Trade Commission estimates that the call volume to the Identity Theft Hotline represents only 5 to 10 percent of the actual number of victims of identity theft;

[(5) victims of identity theft often have extraordinary difficulty restoring their credit and regaining control of their identity because of the viral nature of identity theft;

[(6) identity theft may be ruinous to the good name and credit of consumers whose identities are misappropriated, and victims of identity theft may be denied otherwise well-deserved credit, may have to spend enormous time, effort, and sums of money to remedy their circumstances, and may suffer extreme emotional distress including deep depression founded in profound frustration as they address the array of problems that may arise as a result of identity theft;

[(7) victims are often required to contact numerous Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, consumer credit reporting agencies, and creditors over many years, as each event of fraud arises;

[(8) the Government, business entities, and credit reporting agencies have a shared responsibility to assist identity theft victims, to mitigate the harm that results from fraud perpetrated in the victim's name;

[(9) victims of identity theft need a nationally standardized means of—

[(A) reporting identity theft to law enforcement, consumer credit reporting agencies, and business entities; and

[(B) evidencing their true identity to business entities and credit reporting agencies;

[(10) one of the greatest law enforcement challenges posed by identity theft is that stolen identities are often used to perpetrate crimes in many different localities in different States, and although identity theft is a Federal crime, most often, State and local law enforcement agencies are responsible for investigating and prosecuting the crimes; and

[(11) the Federal Government should assist State and local law enforcement agencies to effectively combat identity theft and the associated fraud.

"(i) the presentation of a government-issued identification card;

"(ii) if providing proof by mail, a copy of a government-issued identification card; or

"(iii) upon the request of the person seeking business records, the business entity may inform the requesting person of the categories of identifying information that the unauthorized person provided the business entity as personally identifying information, and may require the requesting person to provide identifying information in those categories; and

"(B) as proof of a claim of identity theft, at the election of the business entity—

"(i) a copy of a police report evidencing the claim of the victim of identity theft;

"(ii) a copy of a standardized affidavit of identity theft developed and made available by the Federal Trade Commission; or

"(iii) any affidavit of fact that is acceptable to the business entity for that purpose.

"(3) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—No business entity may be held liable for a disclosure, made in good faith and reasonable judgment, to provide information under this section with respect to an individual in connection with an identity theft to other financial information repositories, financial service providers, merchants, law enforcement authorities, victims, or any person alleging to be a victim, if—

"(A) the business entity complies with paragraph (2); and

"(B) such disclosure was made—

"(i) for the purpose of detection, investigation, or prosecution of identity theft; or

"(ii) to assist a victim in recovery of fines, restitution, rehabilitation of the credit of the victim, or such other relief as may be appropriate.

"(4) AUTHORITY TO DECLINE TO PROVIDE INFORMATION.—A business entity may decline to provide information pursuant to paragraph (1) if, in the exercise of good faith and reasonable judgment, the business entity believes that—

"(A) this subsection does not require disclosure of the information; or

"(B) the request for the information is based on a misrepresentation of fact by the victim relevant to the request for information.

"(5) NO NEW RECORDKEEPING OBLIGATION.—Nothing in this subsection creates an obligation on the part of a business entity to obtain, retain, or maintain information or records that are not otherwise required to be retained or maintained in the ordinary course of its business or under other applicable law.

"(II) the consumer knowingly obtained possession of goods, services, or moneys as a result of the blocked transaction or transactions, or the consumer should have known that the consumer obtained possession of goods, services, or moneys as a result of the blocked transaction or transactions; or

"(C) SIGNIFICANCE OF BLOCK.—For purposes of this paragraph, the prior presence of blocked information in the file of a consumer is not evidence of whether the consumer knew or should have known that the consumer obtained possession of any goods, services, or monies as a result of the block.

"(4) EXCEPTION.—A consumer reporting agency shall not be required to comply with this subsection when the agency is issuing information for authorizations, for the purpose of approving or processing negotiable instruments, electronic funds transfers, or similar methods of payment, based solely on negative information, including—

"(c) IDENTITY THEFT.—An action to enforce a liability created under this title may be brought not later than 5 years from the date of the defendant's violation if—

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, the Senate today is considering S. 1742, the Identity Theft Victims Assistance Act of 2002. This is an important issue, and it is proper for the Senate to be giving it consideration. While the text of this bill is seriously flawed and needs careful work and refinement in order for it to have a significantly positive effect in curbing identity theft, I believe that passage of this legislation by the Senate will be seen as an indication of the importance that the Senate attaches to relieving the disruption caused in the lives of victims of these crimes.

When the Senate returns to this issue in the next Congress, I hope that the problems with this bill can be resolved, that the complexity of the issues involved can be adequately considered so that the legislation focuses on the real culprits without penalizing law-abiding citizens and businesses, and without the substantial confusion to the enforcement responsibilities of federal financial regulators that the draft before us would cause. The text in its current form would also expand opportunities for predatory lawsuits, creating new victims, and we must avoid that. We do little good for the country that way.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, Senators CANTWELL and GRASSLEY and others have an amendment at the desk. I ask that that amendment be considered and agreed to; that the committee substitute, as amended, be agreed to; the bill, as amended, be read the third time and passed, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; and that any statements be printed in the RECORD, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4954) was agreed to.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill (S. 1742), as amended, was read the third time and passed, as follows:

(The bill will be printed in a future edition of the RECORD.)

Mr. REID. Mr. President, let me say I have been working in recent hours with the Senator from Washington, Ms. CANTWELL. She has worked tirelessly on this piece of legislation. She has given a number of statements on the floor related to this issue, dealing with what has taken place and what she knows regarding identity theft. I commend and applaud her for her diligence and perseverance. The burden is now on the House of Representatives. They are still in session. There is no reason in the world that they cannot pass this most important piece of legislation.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY—TREATY DOCUMENT NO. 107-19 AND TREATY DOCUMENT NO. 107-20

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the following treaties transmitted to the Senate on November 14, 2002, by the President of the United States:

Convention with Great Britain and Northern Ireland regarding Double Taxation and Prevention of Fiscal Evasion (Treaty Doc. 107-19); and Protocol Amending Convention with Australia regarding Double Taxation and Prevention of Fiscal Evasion (Treaty Doc. 107-20).

I further ask that the treaties be considered as having been read the first time; that they be referred, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed; and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The messages of the President are as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for Senate advice and consent to ratification, the Convention Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income and on Capital Gains, signed at London on July 24, 2001, together with an exchange of notes, as amended by the Protocol signed at Washington on July 19, 2002 (the "Convention"). I also transmit the report of the Department of State concerning the Convention.

The proposed Convention transmitted herewith would replace the Convention Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income and Capital Gains, signed at London on December 31, 1975, as modified by a subsequent agreement and protocols.

This Convention, which is similar to tax treaties between the United States and other developed nations, provides for maximum rates of tax to be applied to various types of income, protection from double taxation of income, and for the exchange of information. The Convention also contains rules making its benefits unavailable to persons who are engaged in treaty shopping. The proposed Convention is the first U.S. income tax convention to provide a zero rate of withholding on certain direct investment dividends.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to this Convention, and that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for Senate advice and consent to ratification, a Protocol Amending the Convention Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Australia for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income, signed at Canberra on September 27, 2001 (the "Protocol"). I also transmit, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Department of State concerning the Protocol.

The Convention, as amended by the Protocol, would be similar to recent tax treaties between the United States and other developed nations. It provides maximum rates of tax to be applied to various types of income and protection from double taxation of income. The Convention, as amended by the Protocol, also provides for resolution of disputes and sets forth rules making its benefits unavailable to residents that are engaged in treaty shopping.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to this Protocol, and that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification.

TREATY WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF HONDURAS FOR THE RETURN OF STOLEN, ROBBED, OR EMBEZZLED VEHICLES AND AIRCRAFT

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to consider Executive Calendar No. 12, the Treaty with Honduras, the treaty be advanced through its parliamentary stages up to and including the presentation of the resolution of the ratification, and the Senate now vote on the resolution of ratification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification.

Senators in favor of the resolution, please stand. (After a pause.) All those opposed, please stand.

In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of the Senators present having voted in the affirmative, the resolution of ratification is agreed to.

The resolution of ratification is as follows:

Resolved, (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the Treaty between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Republic of Honduras for the Return of Stolen, Robbed, or Embezzled Vehicles and Aircraft, with Annexes and a related exchange of notes, signed at Tegucigalpa on November 23, 2001 (Treaty Doc. 107-15).

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH PERU

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to Executive Calendar No. 13, Extradition Treaty with Peru, the treaty be advanced through its parliamentary stages up through and including the presentation of the resolution of ratification, and that the understanding and the condition be agreed to, and the Senate vote on the resolution of ratification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. Senators in favor of the resolution, please stand. (After a pause.) All those opposed, please stand.

In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present and voting having voted in the affirmative, the resolution of ratification is agreed to.

The resolution of ratification and condition are as follows:

Resolved, (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein),

RECESS SUBJECT TO THE CALL OF THE CHAIR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In my capacity as a Senator from the State of New York, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Without objection, it is so ordered.

In my capacity as a Senator from the State of New York, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 9:36 p.m., recessed subject to the call of the Chair and reassembled at 10:15 p.m., when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Ms. CANTWELL).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

ECONOMIC SECURITY AND WORKER ASSISTANCE ACT OF 2001

Mrs. CLINTON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 308, H.R. 3529.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3529) to provide tax incentives for economic recovery and assistance to displaced workers.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mrs. CLINTON. Madam President, before formally making the unanimous consent request, I wish to thank Senator NICKLES for his understanding and cooperation in reaching this point this evening. I very much appreciate his willingness, and that of his staff, to work with us throughout today. And I am very personally grateful for his leadership and good advice and counsel.

This unemployment insurance extension is being sponsored, in addition to myself, by the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Washington, who has been a tremendous advocate, by Senator FITZGERALD of Illinois, and Senator SPECTER of Pennsylvania.

The commitment of all of the sponsors, and others, have made it possible for us to agree this evening to pass a bill that will be extremely welcomed by about 2.1 million Americans who will be able to take advantage of this extension that runs through the end of March. This will also specifically help approximately 177,000 New Yorkers as they enter the holiday season.

Obviously, this is not all that the Presiding Officer and I would have wanted. Perhaps it is more than some would have thought we should do. But I think it works out to be an acceptable compromise in bringing this about at this time.

Again, I personally thank Senator NICKLES for his extraordinary assistance.

So, Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute amendment at the desk be agreed to, the act, as amended, be read a third time, passed, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate; and that any statements related thereto be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4960) was agreed to, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. Section 114 of Public Law 107–229 is amended by striking "the date specified in section 107(c) of this joint resolution" and inserting "March 31, 2003".

SEC. 2. EXTENSION OF THE TEMPORARY EXTENDED UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION ACT OF 2002.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 208 of the Temporary Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–147; 116 Stat. 30) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 208. APPLICABILITY.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), an agreement entered into under this title shall apply to weeks of unemployment—

"(1) beginning after the date on which such agreement is entered into; and

"(2) ending before April 1, 2003.

"(b) TRANSITION FOR AMOUNT REMAINING IN ACCOUNT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3), in the case of an individual who has amounts remaining in an account established under section 203 as of March 29, 2003, temporary extended unemployment compensation shall continue to be payable to such individual from such amounts for any week beginning after such date for which the individual meets the eligibility requirements of this title.

"(2) NO AUGMENTATION AFTER MARCH 26, 2003.—If the account of an individual is exhausted after March 29, 2003, then section 203(c) shall not apply and such account shall not be augmented under such section, regardless of whether such individual's State is in an extended benefit period (as determined under paragraph (2) of such section).

"(3) LIMITATION.—No compensation shall be payable by reason of paragraph (1) for any week beginning after June 28, 2003.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall take effect as if included in the enactment of the Temporary Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 2002 (Public Law 107–147; 116 Stat. 21).

The bill (H.R. 3529), as amended, was read a third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Madam President, I thank my colleague and friend from New York for working with us. I think we have worked out an acceptable compromise. Senator FITZGERALD and Senator SPECTER were very much interested in passing this bill so we were happy to accommodate them.

In contrast to the previous legislation, which was a significant expansion over current law, of which efforts had been made to pass by unanimous consent earlier today, this is an extension of current law. It is a lot less expensive. This is an extension for 3 months.

We also did something else I think is important. We eliminated the cliff. In other words, current law would say by January 1 the 13-week Federal program would be terminated. This says, no, there is a phaseout. So there is not a cliff. At the end of March, if people are already into the system, they can complete their 13-week program. So I think it is responsible.

Also, for the benefit of my colleagues—and some have reservations about this program because, legitimately, they are wondering whether, if you continue to pay out unemployment benefits, they will stay unemployed. And I happen to appreciate many of those concerns.

Now we will not be wrapped up with this beginning in January. So this will give Congress a chance and hopefully offer some assistance to those people who really need it and also offer Congress a chance to get off to a good start without wrestling and debating this issue.

I have debated this issue more than I want to debate it. And I appreciate our colleagues on both sides willing to compromise.

The House passed a 1-month extension. This is a 3-month extension eliminating the cliff. I think it is a more orderly and more well-thought-out program that makes sense.

So I will not object to its passage and appreciate our colleagues from New York and Washington, as well as Illinois and Pennsylvania, for their cooperation in making this happen.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mrs. CLINTON. As I was listening to the Senator from Oklahoma explain why this makes sense, and particularly to eliminate the cliff that, frankly, people would have fallen off at the end of the year, right at the beginning of a new year—and hopefully providing new hope for people—I could not help but think of our colleague, Paul Wellstone. I think he is smiling down on us. I think he is up there waving his arms, pacing around, and saying, good work, and thanks for doing that.

To me, this is tremendous evidence of the kind of cooperation that can come about to bring us together to help people.

Again, I thank my friend from Oklahoma.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I have been on this floor many, many times when there have been speeches on both sides on extending unemployment insurance going back several months. This is what legislating is all about, the art of compromise. Not everyone got what they wanted. But we got something, and it is very important and very positive.

I extend my appreciation to the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Washington, who worked on this diligently, and, of course, the Senator from New York, who has worked on this very hard.

No one has been on the floor more than the Senator from Oklahoma, and he needs to be complimented because he certainly could have stopped this in the last few hours of the session. He chose not to do that. He chose to move forward on a positive note.

I, not only for the Senate, but for the respective States and the whole country, extend my appreciation to the three of you, all fine legislators.

Mr. NICKLES. Thank you.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CLINTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. CANTWELL. Madam President, I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate my colleagues on the passage of the unemployment extension bill which we just did by unanimous consent.

This really was a bipartisan effort by the Senator from Oklahoma and from two of our colleagues, the Senator from Illinois, Mr. FITZGERALD, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. SPECTER, who played a very important role in communicating the needs of unemployment benefit extensions in their States.

I thank the Chair, the Senator from New York, Mrs. CLINTON, who has since July advocated passage of this legislation, talked about the importance of making sure that as our economy has faced a downturn, we continued to make sure the opportunities for income and stimulus in our economy were there.

As she fought for the State of New York, which has been gravely impacted by the events of 9/11 and the downturn in the economy where jobs are just not being created, the Senator got all of us in the country to realize how critical the issue was for us moving forward at a time when the economy has not returned to positive growth.

Obviously the State of Washington has been greatly impacted by that same downturn, in the aerospace industry, in high tech. This legislation will actually help over 75,000 Washingtonians who will get the benefit of having an extension of a program and, being a high unemployment State, will qualify for the benefits of that program. This is actually something I think a few Washingtonians tonight, maybe a few Seattlites, will be sleeping a little bit better from, knowing that in the impending months, as we struggle to get the economy going again, they will actually be able to meet those mortgage payments, pay those health care bills, and continue to move forward.

Economists have said this kind of stimulus has a two-to-one effect; that for every dollar spent on unemployment benefits, it generates about $2.15 into the local economy. We have done a good service for my State's economy and for New York's and Pennsylvania and Illinois, for the whole country, because we will be stimulating those individuals' disposable income.

Again, I thank the Senator from New York for her hard work and vision, pointing out last summer the need to do it, being diligent in this process. And tonight, because of this bipartisan support, there will be more Americans sleeping better as we approach the tough challenges ahead in getting our economy moving but knowing that we have not left workers behind, workers who would rather have a paycheck than an unemployment check, but at least now they will be continuing to add to the economy.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to a period of morning business with Senators allowed to speak therein for a period not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF PAUL WELLSTONE

Mr. CHAFEE. Madam President, today I offer my condolences to all the friends, family members and admirers of Paul Wellstone. As has been said many times, Paul Wellstone was fiercely proud of the causes with which he associated himself. Certainly, to have Paul Wellstone articulately and strongly arguing on one's behalf was a great asset. His many friends are forever grateful for his wrestler's tenacity as he advocated for those issues in which he so emotionally believed.

Several years ago a candidate for Congress in Rhode Island retired from the campaign because of a shortage of funds, declaring that no longer could "Mr. Smith go to Washington." Paul Wellstone proved that yes, indeed, Mr. Smith could go to Washington. In 1990 he challenged an incumbent who possessed a huge financial advantage in what many assumed to be a quixotic and hopeless campaign. In November of that year Paul Wellstone was the only challenger to beat an incumbent, providing inspiration forever to long shots.

Three cheers for the people of Minnesota who have shown a propensity for embracing people of divergent philosophies. In the last few years Minnesota has elected Rod Grams, Jesse Ventura and Paul Wellstone; public servants with very different approaches to the issues of the day. I join Minnesotans and Americans in mourning the death of the passionate and good-natured Paul Wellstone.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR MAX CLELAND

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I am honored to pay tribute and recognize the leadership, dedication to public service and hard work of my colleague from Georgia, Senator MAX CLELAND. Few Members of the Senate have sacrificed so much for their country.

Senator CLELAND has had a remarkable 30-year career in public service including a tour of duty in Vietnam in 1967 in which he was awarded the Bronze and Silver Stars for meritorious service. MAX started his career in the military soon after graduating from Stetson University, where he was a member of the Army ROTC. In 1967, he volunteered for duty in Vietnam. He quickly worked his way up the ranks, earning a promotion to Captain in 1968. In April of the same year, he was seriously wounded in a grenade explosion, which cost him both of his legs and his right arm. One month before his tour was up, he was sent home to recover from his injuries.

His dedication to public service continued when he won a seat in the Georgia State Senate. As the youngest state senator, he pushed for a State law making public facilities accessible to the disabled. In 1975, Senator CLELAND began his lifelong mission of improving the lives of the men and women in the military. MAX was asked to work for the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, and 2 years later he accepted the position to head up the U.S. Veterans Administration. He was the youngest administrator and only Vietnam veteran to ever head up the agency. During his time with the Veterans Administration, MAX instituted the "Vets Center Program," which for the first time provided psychological counseling to combat veterans. This program has now led to over 200 Vet Centers around the country.

Senator CLELAND continued his public service for the people of Georgia in 1982, when he was elected Secretary of State. During his time in this position, he fought relentlessly for campaign finance reform and to reduce telemarking fraud. Senator CLELAND also played a key role in the implementation of the National Voter Registration Act, or Motor Voter, in the State of Georgia. This in turn allowed an increase in access to government by getting nearly 1 million citizens of Georgia registered to vote.

MAX was elected to the U.S. Senate in 1996; he filled the spot that was vacated by the retiring Sam Nunn. The 6 years that he spent in the Senate were marked by his passion and drive to accomplish what was of importance to the people he served. He was a proponent for the Patients' Bill of Rights and doggedly battled for the improvement of education by way of increased resources for teacher training and certification.

As a former military man who served his country in Vietnam, Senator CLELAND brought an understanding to the Senate Chamber, of the sacrifices made by individuals in the armed forces. This understanding led him to champion military causes. As chairman of the Personnel Subcommittee of the Armed Services Committee, he fought for improvements in the quality of life of our active-duty, reserve, and retired military personnel through enhancement of the Montgomery G.I. Bill and improvement of retirement benefits. All his hard work has not gone unnoticed, Senator CLELAND has been recognized nationally as the "Minute Man of the Year," an award given by the Reserve Officers Association of America to two individuals annually for their tremendous leadership in the areas of military and national security. There is no doubt that on and off the battlefield, MAX was a leader for the Armed Forces.

Senator CLELAND also provided support to military personnel stationed at the Grand Forks Air Force Base in North Dakota. In 1997, during the devastating floods in North Dakota, several hundred active duty personnel from the Grand Forks base were unable to access disaster relief because Federal law limited assistance to personnel living on the base. Senator CLELAND, as a member of the Senate Armed Services Committee, was instrumental in amending the law to enable those servicemen living off base to be eligible for this critical disaster assistance.

MAX's bravery, courage, and passion for these issues and many others will be missed. It has been an honor to serve with somebody who represents his constituents with such energy, drive and passion. I would like to join my colleagues in wishing the Senator and his family the best in the future and paying tribute to his outstanding public service. I wish him well.

TRIBUTE TO REPRESENTATIVE JAMES V. HANSEN

Mr. HATCH. Madam President, I rise to pay tribute to my long-time friend and colleague, Representative JAMES V. HANSEN. After 22 years of dedicated service to his country and to the State of Utah, Jim has chosen to end his career as a Member of Congress and return home to Utah and to his grandchildren.

I am pleased that Mr. HANSEN will be able to enjoy his retirement, but we will miss him. Utah has never been better served by a Member of Congress. Just this year he was described by a national media source as one of the 10 most powerful Members of the House of Representatives. Considering the number of Members of that body, that is really saying something. Representative HANSEN has had a very positive impact on our Nation, but his impact on Utah and Utahns is truly incalculable.

Mr. HANSEN was the first Representative from Utah to chair a full committee. Due in large part to the respect he earned among his colleagues on both sides of the aisle, he was appointed to chair the high-profile Committee on Standards of Official Conduct.

As some of my colleagues may know, Utah is made up of about 70 percent public lands which includes national parks, Bureau of Land Management lands, national forests, national monuments, national wildlife refuges, and vast military holdings. As a very senior member of the House Armed Services Committee and the Chairman of the Committee on Natural Resources, Representative HANSEN has the protector and promoter of so many of Utah's interests.

Mr. HANSEN's service to the public has spanned more that four decades. He spent the first 12 years of his public service career on the City Council of Farmington, UT. Following that, he served for four terms as a member of the Utah House of Representatives, including one term as the Speaker of the House. In 1980, Mr. HANSEN was elected to Congress where he has served diligently until today.

Mr. HANSEN's honesty, hard work, and strong character have made him a lawmaker that we will never forget. I am one of many who will sorely miss his plain talking leadership and his wisdom on matters of public policy. On behalf of my colleagues in the Senate and the people of Utah, I would like to publicly thank JIM and his wonderful wife Ann for giving so much of themselves to their State and to their Nation.

GRATITUDE FOR NEW ZEALAND'S FIREFIGHTERS

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Madam President, I rise today, on behalf of my State of Oregon, to express our deepest gratitude for the New Zealanders who put their lives on the line this last summer in fighting the ravenous wildfires experienced in the West.

Even as the rains of fall settle into the forests of the Pacific Northwest, it is not difficult to remember the fiery infernos that engulfed the West only a few months ago. The year 2002 was the second worst fire season in 50 years. Nationwide 21 lives were lost and 6.7 million acres were burned.

It was one of the Nation's largest fires, called the Biscuit Fire, that drew a cadre of international firefighters to Oregon, the world's best sent to join the fight against our worst disaster. The Biscuit Fire, the largest wildfire in Oregon in over a century, eventually burned 500,000 acres in southwestern Oregon. At times, firefighters put the chances of losing one or all of the Illinois Valley's four towns at 75 percent. However, 7,000 of the world's best firefighters beat the odds and staved off an exploding fire that threatened hundreds of square miles and thousands of homes. As a result of their relentless work, no lives were lost and structural loss was virtually nonexistent.

On behalf of my State of Oregon, I want to thank and commend the brave New Zealand firefighters who helped win that battle against wildfire. They are John Barnes, Darryl Robson, John Sutton, Richard McNamara, Paul Tolladay, Phil Wishnowsky, Robin Thompson, Trevor Tiday, Jock Darragh, and Ross Hamilton.

While I hope that such perilous circumstances will never call these firefighters back to Oregon or elsewhere, I know that forest fires will continue to burn and brave firefighters will continue to put their lives between the fire and ours. We will never forget that.

TRIBUTE TO SENATOR BOB SMITH

Mr. CONRAD. Madam President, I take this opportunity to pay tribute to and recognize the hard work of my colleague from New Hampshire, Senator BOB SMITH. Since joining the Senate in 1990, he has fought with honesty and commitment for the issues that he believed to be most important.

As the ranking member and former chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, he focused great attention on reforms of the Corps of Engineers and funding to expand and improve transportation infrastructure. Also, as a senior member of the Armed Services Committee, Senator SMITH fought passionately for a strong military, and always made national security a top priority.

I had the pleasure of working with BOB SMITH in his efforts to establish accountability measures for missing MIAs and POWs. In his capacity as a member of the Senate Select Committee on POW/MIA Affairs, Senator SMITH was very helpful in answering and addressing questions about Vietnam POWs from North Dakota. He also helped North Dakotans on POW issues from the cold war era.

I also had the privilege of serving with Senator SMITH on the Ethics Committee, which he chaired. I found him to be completely fair and non-partisan in his conduct of his duties.

He also was one of the first of my colleagues to console me on the untimely death of my chief of staff, Kent Hall.

Mr. President, it has been an honor to serve in the Senate with BOB SMITH. I have the utmost respect for his service to the people of New Hampshire. While sitting in the historic desk of Daniel Webster, he has made contributions not only to the Senate but also to our Nation. I would like to join my colleagues in wishing Senator SMITH and his family the best in the future.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Madam President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred December 28, 2001 in Marshfield, MA. According to police, a teenage assailant beat a man because the assailant thought the victim was gay. The victim was standing outside a local store when a car containing three men pulled into the parking lot. One of the men in the car yelled anti-gay obscenities at the victim. The victim entered the store with two friends, and upon exiting, was beaten by the assailant. The assailant yelled anti-gay epithets while punching and kicking the victim, continuing the beating even after the victim fell to the ground.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

FY 2003 DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION CONFERENCE REPORT

Ms. SNOWE. Madam President, I rise today to speak briefly about my support for the fiscal year 2003 National Defense Authorization Conference Report and would like to particularly endorse its name as the Bob Stump National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003 in recognition of the chairman of the House Armed Services Committee's 25 years of distinguished service to that Committee.

I also acknowledge the senior Senator from Michigan, Mr. CARL LEVIN, the chairman of the Armed Services Committee, for the leadership he provided in support of the authorization bill, and, of course, the ranking member, Senator JOHN WARNER of Virginia, whose tireless efforts on behalf of veterans led to the final agreements that brought this bill to the floor.

Let me recognize the efforts of every Senator on the Committee. As a former member of that committee, I well understand the long hours and persistent effort needed to move this vital bipartisan legislation.

The conference report takes great strides toward improving the quality of service for our dedicated men and women of the military, modernizing our armed services, and making our homeland safe.

Because we recognize that our service members are our most valuable asset, this legislation makes a solid investment in their quality of life by increasing pay and enhancing educational and health care opportunities for our active duty military members and their family members. And that is only right, for today we are asking a great deal of our gallant young men and women as they guard our Nation at home and abroad in this dangerous and deadly post-September 11 world.

This legislation recognizes that we also owe a continuing debt to those who have served honorably by finally granting combat-wounded military retirees the same benefit available to every other retired Federal employee—the ability to collect full retirement pay and disability entitlements without offsets. There is much work to be done before we achieve the full equity of concurrent receipt for all disabled military retirees, but as Senator WARNER has appropriately noted, we have established a "beachhead" for this issue.

I do find it regrettable, however, that the conference report does not complete the job of overturning the ban on privately funded abortion services in overseas military hospitals for military women and dependents based overseas, which was reinstated in the Fiscal Year 1996 authorization bill.

This is a ban that, without merit or reason, puts the reproductive health of these women at risk . . . a ban that the Senate voted to overturn in June by a vote of 52–40. Sadly, this is the second time that this policy change, which has been supported by the majority of the Senate, has fallen victim to the conference committee process.

This ban continues to be a threat to more than just the freedoms of American military women overseas, it's also a threat to their health because it places them at the mercy of the local health care infrastructure in whatever country that they are based. While I support this conference report, I remain deeply disappointed that the conference did not include this critical change of policy regarding this arbitrary ban.

As for modernizing our forces, let me speak on an area that is critical to the security of the Nation—shipbuilding. We are learning that in order to effectively engage the forces of terror wherever they hide, we must have the ability to project our power immediately to any part of the globe. Today, we can do that by dispatching our forces in carrier battle groups or amphibious ready groups. However, as a former chair of the Seapower Subcommittee, I remained concerned, as I know the committee is, about the continuing decline in shipbuilding investments made by the Navy.

I note the conferees included detailed language about the Navy's ship acquisition program and completely agree with their conclusion that, without a fully vetted long range ship-building program, we will be faced with a Navy that is unable to carry out the missions assigned to them in both the short-term and the long-term.

To quote the report, "Absent more immediate investment, DOD will have to reduce the number or scope of missions assigned to Navy ships. Witnesses have testified that, if neither course is incorporated in future Navy budget programs, the men and women of the Navy and the Marine Corps will bear the burden of these decisions through some combination of longer deployments and less time at home between deployments."

I find that very troubling indeed in these dangerous times.

Therefore, I am encouraged this legislation mandates stronger shipbuilding funding and construction in the future years. Provisions such as section 1022 that requires the Navy to submit an annual 30 year shipbuilding plan with their budget request will not only assist us in understanding the Navy's ship recapitalization plan but will ensure that the Department of Defense and Navy are committed to buying the number and type of ships necessary to fulfill all of their missions.

I am also pleased that this authorization provides $2.4 billion for the construction of two DDG–51 Arleigh-Burke class destroyers and extends through fiscal year 2007 the multi-year procurement authority for that class. For it is these ships, along with cruisers and frigates, that provide protection to the carriers and amphibious ships we are deploying to the Persian Gulf to prosecute the war on terrorism. Surface combatants are the backbone of our Navy and I support section 1021 that requires the Secretary of the Navy to notify Congress should the number of active and reserve surface combatant ships drop below 116.

The legislation also looks to the future by authorizing almost $970 million for the development of technologies to be incorporated into the next generation of surface combatant, the DD(X) land attack destroyer. Moreover, it adds $5 million for the DDG Destroyer Optimized Manning Initiative, a Navy effort to enhance the operational effectiveness of Aegis destroyers with new technologies, policies and procedures to significantly reduce crew workload and improve readiness.

The legislation authorizes $10.4 billion, $376 million more than requested, for science and technology programs including many that will be performed in Maine to protect our troops and our homeland such as the project designed to help identify and address the needs of military personnel in the event of a biowarfare attack.

Of potentially significant value to the Navy, it authorizes $1 million for research at the University of Maine aimed at developing a specialized structural reliability analysis process to optimize the use of polymers in future ship construction, and provides $5 million in funding for development of a Small Kill Vehicle Technology, aimed at improving the accuracy of missile and anti-missile technology.

Furthermore, among the more critical provisions of this legislation are those aimed at protecting our homeland. It provides the President with $10 billion for the war against terrorism including $4.3 billion for military operations and $1 billion for equipment replacement and upgrades to military capabilities.

And finally, the legislation includes almost $1 billion for Chem-Bio programs designed to provide advanced individual protection and equipment to detect and decontaminate chemical and biological agents, as well as an additional $480 million for DoD homeland security and consequence management.

This authorization provides the men and women of our armed forces with the equipment they need to accomplish their mission, the quality of life they have earned and security for their families. I have been proud to support this legislation because in a year when our Nation is facing unprecedented security challenges and dangers, we can do no less.

THE PIPELINE SAFETY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2002

Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, I am pleased that last night the Senate unanimously passed pipeline safety legislation in the form of H.R. 3609, the Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002. This bill is the product of over three years of bipartisan work and compromise, and I thank my colleague, Senator MCCAIN, for his leadership on this important issue.

Mr. MCCAIN. I would like to thank my many colleagues for joining us in supporting this important legislation. This bill will result in improvements in the safety regulatory program at the Department of Transportation, increased levels of safety throughout our national pipeline system, and in the communities through which pipelines run. This bill contains several important improvements, including: requirements for minimum standards for pipeline integrity management programs, requirements for public education programs, and requirements that the Office of Pipeline Safety and the Research and Special Programs Administration comply with safety recommendations made by the National Transportation Safety Board and the Department of Transportation Inspector General, many of which have already been started.

Mr. HOLLINGS. To expedite enactment of the significant pipeline safety reforms included in this bill, the leadership of the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation has worked with the House Committees on Transportation and Infrastructure and Energy and Commerce in developing the compromise agreement. This Joint Explanatory Statement therefore represents the views of the Chairman and Ranking Member of the Senate Commerce Committee, along with the Chairmen and Ranking Members of the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and the Energy and Commerce Committee. This Joint Explanatory Statement will provide legislative history for interpreting this important pipeline safety legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that this statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Section 1. Short title; amendment of title 49, United States Code

This section designates the act as the "Pipeline Safety Improvement Act of 2002."

Section 2. One-call notification programs

This section requires that state one-call notification programs provide for the participation of government operators and contract excavators. Section 2 also requires that state one-call notification programs document enumerated items set forth in the statute. Additionally, the requirement that the Secretary of Transportation include certain information in reports submitted under section 60124 of Title 49 is made permanent. Authorizations for appropriations for grants to states for fiscal years 2003 through 2006 are provided at $1,000,000 per year, and grants for administration in section 6107(b) are updated for fiscal years 2003 through 2006. This section also amends section 6105 of Title 49 by requiring the Secretary of Transportation to encourage the states, operators of one-call notification programs, operators of underground facilities, and excavators (including government and contract excavators) to use the practices set forth in the best practices report entitled "Common Ground," as periodically updated, and requires the Secretary of Transportation to provide technical assistance to a non-profit organization specifically established for the purpose of reducing construction-related damage to underground facilities. Authorizations for appropriations for fiscal years 2003 through 2006 are provided at $500,000 per year, but would not be derived from user fees collected under section 60301 of title 49.

Section 3. One-call notification of pipeline operators

This section provides for the enforcement of one-call notification programs by a state authority if the state's program meets the requirements set forth in the statute. The application of the term "person" who intends to engage in an activity necessitating the use of the one-call system is expanded to include government employees or contractors.

This section amends section 60123(d) of Title 49 by rearranging the phrase "knowingly and willfully" to address the problem raised when a court interpreted existing law to require a knowing and willful standard to, not only engaging in an excavation activity, but also to subsequently damaging a pipeline facility. The consequence of the court's interpretation makes prosecutions more difficult by requiring the government to show the defendant knew subsequent damages would result from excavation activity and that the defendant's conduct was willful. This section of the bill corrects the court's interpretation by now requiring that the "knowingly and willfully" standard apply only to engaging in an excavation activity.

This section also provides that penalties under the criminal penalties section can be reduced if the violator promptly reports a violation.

Section 4. State oversight role

This section amends section 60106 of Title 49 to allow the Secretary of Transportation to make an agreement with a state authority authorizing the state authority to participate in the oversight of interstate pipeline transportation including incident investigation, new construction, and other inspection and investigatory duties. However the Secretary shall not delegate the enforcement of safety standards for interstate pipeline facilities to a state authority. This section further provides that the Secretary may terminate agreements with the State authorities if a gap results in the State authority's oversight responsibilities of intrastate pipeline transportation, the State authority fails to meet requirements set forth in this section, or continued participation in the oversight of interstate pipeline transportation would not promote pipeline safety. Existing state agreements shall continue until a new agreement between the state and the DOT is executed or December 31, 2003, whichever is sooner.

Section 5. Public education programs

Section 5 amends section 60116 of Title 49 to include hazardous liquid pipeline facilities in this section requiring a continuing program to educate the public on the use of one-call notification systems, the possible hazards associated with unintended releases, and how to tell if an unintended release occurred, what steps should be taken for public safety in the event of a pipeline release, and how to report such an event. This section also requires owners and operators to review existing public education programs for effectiveness and to modify their programs as necessary. In addition, the section allows the Secretary to issue standards prescribing the elements of public education programs and develop materials for use in such programs.

Previous versions of Senate-passed pipeline safety legislation also included a provision calling for the coordination of emergency preparedness between operators of pipeline facilities and state and local officials, as well as to provide for public access to certain safety information. Agreement was not reached on how safety information could be accessed by the public in a manner that would protect security-sensitive information from distribution. The managers agreed that this issue would be better dealt with in the context of the pending homeland security legislation.

Section 6. Protection of employees providing pipeline safety information

This section adds provisions for the protection of employees who are discharged or otherwise discriminated against with respect to compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment for (1) providing information to the federal government about alleged violations of Federal law relating to pipeline safety; (2) refusing to participate in any practice made illegal by Federal law relating to pipeline safety; or (3) assisting or participating in any proceeding to carry out the purposes of pipeline safety legislation. This section establishes the procedural framework in which complaints are handled by the Secretary of Labor and the remedies available to the prevailing party.

This section contains a provision that essentially says if a preliminary order provides that an employee must be allowed to return to work, the filing of an objection by the employer "shall not operate to stay any reinstatement remedy contained in the preliminary order." The intention of this language is to assure that the mere filing of an objection would not work as an automatic stay, thus precluding an employee from returning to work pending the outcome of the matter. However, this language would not preclude an employer from filing an independent motion for a stay if sufficient grounds exist for the filing of such a motion.

Section 7. Safety orders

Section 7 adds a paragraph to section 60117 of Title 49 to give the Secretary of Transportation authority to order an operator of a facility to take corrective action if the Secretary decides that a potential safety-related condition exists. The Office of Pipeline Safety (OPS) requested this provision so that corrective action could be taken immediately rather than waiting until a facility is classified as "hazardous" prior to requiring corrective action.

Section 8. Penalties

This section modifies the existing penalties provision set forth in section 60112 of Title 49 to allow the Secretary of Transportation to decide if the operation of a pipeline facility, is "or would be" hazardous to life, property, or the environment. The purpose of the modification is to give the Secretary authority to take action prior to the facility, the construction of the facility, or any component of the facility actually becoming hazardous, thereby establishing a framework of preventative actions, rather than actions only in response to an imminent hazard.

In subsection (a)(1) of section 60122, the amounts of the penalties have been increased. The per day, per incident, amount has been increased from $25,000 to $100,000. The maximum civil penalty for a related series of violations has been increased from $500,000 to $1,000,000. This section of the bill also provides that, in determining the amount of a civil penalty, the Secretary of Transportation shall consider as an additional consideration in section 60122(b) of Title 49, the adverse impact on the environment. The Secretary of Transportation may consider the economic benefit gained from the violation without reduction because of subsequent damages.

This section also modifies the enforcement section of the statute (section 60120(a)(1) of Title 49) by specifically providing that the court may award appropriate relief, including a temporary or permanent injunction, punitive damages, and the assessment of civil penalties. The current statutory language specifying that the Attorney General may proceed only at the request of the Secretary of Transportation remains in effect.

Section 8 also requires that the Comptroller General conduct a study of the actions, policies, and procedures of the Secretary of Transportation for assessing and collecting fines and penalties.

Section 9. Pipeline safety information grants to communities

Section 9 requires the Secretary of Transportation to make grants for technical assistance to local communities and groups of individuals (not including for-profit entities) relating to the safety of pipelines in local communities. The purpose of this provision is to provide grants to communities for technical assistance such as engineering or scientific analysis of pipeline safety issues. Applicants must compete for the grants in a procedure established by the Secretary of Transportation, who shall also establish the criteria for the recipients. Additionally, the Secretary must establish procedures to ensure that the funds have been properly accounted for and spent in a manner consistent with the purpose of the grants. Any one-grant recipient may not receive more than $50,000. The grant funds cannot be used for lobbying or in direct support of litigation. This section authorizes the appropriation of $1,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

Section 10. Operator assistance in investigations

This section requires the operator of a pipeline facility to make available information and records to the Secretary of Transportation or the National Safety Transportation Board (NTSB) in the event of an accident, subject to constitutional protections for operators and employees. Actions taken by an operator pursuant to this section shall be in accordance with the terms and conditions of any applicable collective bargaining agreement.

Section 11. Population encroachment and rights-of-way

This section requires the Secretary of Transportation, along with the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) and other federal agencies and state and local governments, to study land use practices and zoning ordinances, as well as the preservation of environmental resources, with regard to pipeline rights-of-way. Based upon the purposes set forth in this section, a report is to be written that identifies successful practices, ordinances, and laws addressing population encroachment on pipeline rights-of-way, being mindful of protecting the public safety, pipeline workers, and the environment. The report must be completed within one year from the date of enactment and provided to Congress, appropriate federal agencies, and the States for further distribution to the appropriate local authorities.

Section 12. Pipeline integrity, safety, and reliability research and development

This section requires the heads of the participating agencies to carry out a program of research, development, demonstration, and standardization to ensure the integrity of pipelines. The Secretary of Energy, Secretary of Transportation, and the Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology (NIST) each have defined roles. The Secretary of Transportation, in coordination with the Secretary of Energy and the Director of the National Institute of Standards and Technology, shall prepare and submit to Congress a 5-year plan to guide the activities under this section. The plan shall also be submitted to the Technical Pipeline Safety Standards Committee and the Technical Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Standards Committee for review. The section authorizes appropriations for the fiscal years 2003 through 2006 in the following amounts: Secretary of Energy: $10,000,000; the Secretary of Transportation: $10,000,000; and the National Institute of Standards and Technology: $5,000,000. Any sums authorized pursuant to this section shall not be derived from user fees. In addition $3,000,000 from the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund shall be transferred to the Secretary of Transportation, as provided in appropriations Acts, to carry out programs for detection, prevention, and mitigation of oil spills for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

Even though the Secretary of Transportation does not regulate gathering lines, the participating agencies are encouraged to include such lines in their research, development, demonstration, and standardization efforts on the integrity of gathering lines.

Section 13. Pipeline qualification programs

This section requires the Secretary of Transportation to require operators of pipeline facilities to develop qualification programs for their personnel who perform covered tasks (as defined in the Code of Federal Regulations). This section also requires the Secretary to have in place standards and criteria for such qualification programs, including a method for examining or testing the qualifications of individuals who perform covered tasks. Such method may include written examination, oral examination, on-the-job training, simulations, observation during on-the-job performance, and other forms of assessment. The method may not be limited to observation of on-the-job performance, except with respect to tasks where the Secretary has determined specifically that such observation is the best method of examining or testing qualifications. Further, the Secretary must ensure that the results of any such on-the-job performance observations are documented in writing. The Secretary may waive or modify requirements if not inconsistent with pipeline safety. The Secretary is required to verify each operator's qualification program, including modifications to previously verified programs. In the event the Secretary fails to establish standards and criteria as set forth in this section, pipeline facility operators are required to develop and implement qualification programs based on the requirements of this section. The Secretary is required to report to Congress within 5 years on the status and results of personnel qualification regulations. A pilot program is established for the certification of individuals who operate computer-based systems for controlling the operations of pipelines. The pilot program seeks the participation of 3 pipeline facilities.

Section 14. Risk analysis and integrity management programs for gas pipelines

This section requires operators of pipeline facilities subject to section 60109 of Title 49 to adopt and implement a written integrity management program to reduce risks to each facility. Within 12 months of the enactment of the bill, this section requires the Secretary of Transportation to prescribe standards to direct each operator's conduct of a risk analysis and adoption and implementation of an integrity management program, which must occur within 24 months from the enactment of the section. Minimum requirements are set forth in this section for integrity management programs and for the rule regulating the same, which include a baseline integrity assessment of each of an operator's facilities which must be completed within 10 years after the enactment of the section (at least 50 percent of such facilities shall be assessed no later than 5 years after the date of enactment of this section), and a reassessment of each facility at a minimum of once every 7 years, with prioritization being based on all relevant risk factors, including any previously discovered defects or anomalies and any history of leaks, repairs, or failures.

The Secretary of Transportation is required to issue a rule on integrity management programs, and each operator of a pipeline facility subject to section 60109 of Title 49 is required to adopt and implement an integrity management program, even if the Secretary does not issue a rule. This section does not apply to natural gas distribution lines because section 60109 of Title 49 does not, nor was it intended to, apply to natural gas distribution lines.

Section 14 authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to grant waivers and modifications pursuant to section 60118(c) of Title 49 for any requirement for reassessment of a facility for reasons that may include the need to maintain local product supply or the lack of internal inspection devices. The waivers or modifications shall not be inconsistent with pipeline safety.

This section also requires that the Comptroller General conduct a study to evaluate the 7-year reassessment interval required by this section. The study is to be completed and transmitted to Congress no later than 4 years from the date of enactment.

In this section, each operator of a gas pipeline facility is required to conduct a risk analysis for facilities located in high consequence areas and to adopt and implement an integrity management program for each such facility to reduce associated risks. This section requires each operator to prioritize facilities for integrity assessment based on all risk factors, including any history of leaks, repairs, or failures, and directs the operator to give priority to facilities with the highest risks.

The Department of Transportation's Research and Special Programs Administration (RSPA) issued a final rule defining "high consequence areas" on August 6, 2002. The managers strongly support RSPA's regulation defining high consequence areas, although recognize that the definition could be subject to alteration by future regulatory action by RSPA.

Pipeline safety regulations have long required gas operators to survey and patrol along their pipeline rights-of-way to classify areas of population. The new definition of high consequence areas builds on the existing classification of areas where the potential consequences of a gas pipeline accident may be significant or may do considerable harm to people and their property, and includes current class 3 and 4 locations, facilities with persons who are mobility impaired, confined, or hard to evacuate, and places where people gather for recreational and other purposes.

In the July 2002 Technical Pipeline Safety Standards Committee meeting to consider the proposed definition, RSPA made clear its intent to include in its definition known areas where people gather, such as the Pecos River pipeline crossing near Carlsbad, New Mexico, which was commonly used by campers and fishermen and was the location of a pipeline rupture in August 2000 that resulted in 12 fatalities. The managers support is expressed for this new definition of high consequence areas and expect RSPA to further clarify the application of the definition in the substantive rule to be issued on integrity management programs.

Section 15. National Pipeline Mapping System

Section 15 requires operators of pipeline facilities, except distribution lines and gathering lines, to provide to the Secretary of Transportation geospatial data appropriate for use in the National Mapping System, the name and address of the person with primary operational control, and a means for a member of the public to contact the operator for additional information about the facilities. There is a requirement to update the information as necessary.

Section 16. Coordination of environmental reviews

Section 16 requires the President to establish an interagency committee for the purpose of developing and ensuring the implementation of a coordinated environmental review and permitting process in order for pipeline operators to complete all activities necessary to carry out pipeline repairs within any time periods specified by rule by the Secretary of Transportation.

The chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality shall chair the Interagency Committee, which shall consist of representatives of Federal agencies with responsibilities relating to pipeline repair projects. The Interagency Committee shall evaluate Federal permitting requirements and shall examine the access, excavation, and restoration practices of the pipeline industry for the purpose of developing a compendium of best practices used by the industry to access, excavate, and restore the site of a pipeline repair. Based upon the evaluation conducted, the members of the Interagency Committee shall enter into, by unanimous consent, a memorandum of understanding to provide for the coordinated and expedited pipeline repair permit review process so that pipeline operators may commence and complete pipeline repairs within any time periods imposed on the repair projects by rules promulgated by the Secretary of Transportation. Each agency represented on the Interagency Committee is required to revise its regulations to implement the provisions of the memorandum of understanding.

This section also provides for the implementation of alternative mitigation measures to be used by operators of pipeline facilities until all applicable permits have been granted. To the extent necessary, the Secretary of Transportation is required to revise the regulations of the Department to accommodate such implementation. However, such revisions shall not allow an operator of a pipeline facility to implement alternate mitigation measures unless to do so would be consistent with the protection of human health, public safety, and the environment; the operator has applied for and is diligently and in good faith pursuing all required Federal, state, and local permits necessary to carry out the repair project; and is compatible with pipeline safety.

The Secretary of Transportation is required to designate an ombudsman to assist in expediting pipeline repairs and resolving disagreements between Federal, state, and local permitting agencies and the operator of a pipeline facility. The actions of the ombudsman must be consistent with the protection of human health, public safety, and the environment.

The Secretary of Transportation is required to encourage states and local governments to consolidate their respective permitting processes for pipeline repair projects that are subject to any time periods for repairs specified by rule by the Secretary of Transportation.

Section 17. Nationwide toll-free number system

Section 17 requires the Secretary of Transportation to work in conjunction with the Federal Communications Commission (FCC), facility operators, excavators, and one-call notification system operators for the establishment of a nationwide toll-free 3-digit telephone number system to be used by state one-call notification systems.

Section 18. Implementation of Inspector General recommendations

Section 18 requires the Secretary of Transportation to respond to each of the recommendations of the Department of Transportation Inspector General contained in RT–2000–069 every 90 days and to submit the responses to the appropriate committees of Congress.

Section 19. NTSB safety recommendations

Section 19 requires RSPA and OPS to respond to recommendations received from the NTSB within 90 days from receipt of such recommendations. Such responses shall state the intentions of the OPS with respect to the recommendations and shall state the timetable for completing the procedures and reasons for refusals to do so. The responses shall be made available to the public. The OPS is required to submit an annual report describing each recommendation received and the OPS response to each recommendation for the previous year.

Section 20. Miscellaneous amendments

Section 20 amends section 60102(a) of Title 49 by adding language expressing that the purpose of the chapter is to provide adequate protection against risks to life and property posed by pipeline transportation pipeline facilities by improving the regulatory and enforcement authority of the Secretary of Transportation.

This section also modifies the qualifications of the individuals selected to serve on the Technical Safety Standards Committees pursuant to section 60115 of Title 49 so that none of the individuals selected for committee membership from the general public "may have a significant financial interest in the pipeline, petroleum, or gas industry." The intent of this provision is to prevent industry employees and individuals with a sizable stake in the pipeline industry from serving as representatives from the general public, not prevent service from individuals who have pipeline, petroleum, or gas industry stock interests in their retirement plans.

Section 21. Technical amendments

Section 21 makes technical amendments to correct previous drafting errors in the existing legislation.

Section 22. Authorization of appropriations

Section 22 authorizes appropriations for the Department of Transportation and state grants for safety programs for the fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

Section 23. Inspections by direct assessment

Section 23 requires the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations prescribing standards for inspections of a pipeline facility by direct assessment.

Section 24. State pipeline safety advisory committees

Section 24 requires the Secretary of Transportation to respond within 90 days after receiving recommendations from advisory committees appointed by the Governor of any state.

Section 25. Pipeline bridge risk study

Section 25 requires the Secretary of Transportation to conduct a study to determine whether cable-suspension pipeline bridges pose structural or other risks. The Secretary may only use funds specifically appropriated to carry this section.

Section 26. Study and Report on Natural Gas Pipeline and Storage Facilities in New England

Section 26 requires the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, in consultation with the Department of Energy, to conduct a study on the natural gas pipeline transmission network in New England and natural gas storage facilities associated with that network and report back to the relevant House and Senate Committees within a year of the date of enactment.

AVERTING A BREAKDOWN IN FEDERAL TAX ENFORCEMENT

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, many have said they want the next Congress to work on tax reform. Any tax reform effort we undertake, however, needs to address the grave warning recently provided by IRS Commissioner Charles O. Rossotti about the need for immediate steps to avert a breakdown in federal tax enforcement.

Mr. Rossotti has just completed 5 years of work to restore confidence in the effectiveness and fairness of the IRS. He left the administration last week after submitting a report to the IRS Oversight Board summarizing his efforts and the current state of the IRS. His overall conclusion was that, while the IRS made significant progress over the last 5 years in revamping its procedures and improving interactions with average taxpayers, the IRS is "losing the war" on stopping tax cheats.

Mr. Rossotti wrote that while the size and the complexity of the Tax Code have continued to increase, IRS enforcement resources have continue to diminish. He described the IRS as "outnumbered" and facing a huge and growing gap "between the number of taxpayers whom the IRS knows are not filing, not reporting or not paying what they owe, and our capacity to require them to comply." Using specific facts and figures, he provides data supporting the shocking statistic that four out of five U.S. tax cheats will likely escape detection and correction action due to the IRS' limited resources to enforce the tax laws.

Mr. Rossotti also summarized what is happening among tax professionals to enable so-called sophisticated taxpayers to escape paying their fair share, and what the likely consequence is for honest taxpayers left footing the bill. Here is what he said:

> Recognizing the IRS' diminished capacity, promoters and some tax professionals are selling a wide range of tax schemes and devices designed to improperly reduce taxes to taxpayers based on the simple premise that they can get away with it. When this perception becomes increasingly widespread, the essential pillar or our tax system is lost—namely, the belief of honest taxpayers that if someone does not pay what he or she owes, then the IRS will do something about it.

Mr. Rossotti's full analysis appears in the report he filed with the IRS Oversight Board, and I ask unanimous consent for the complete text of that report to appear in the record following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. LEVIN. This report not only sets out the scope and causes of the growing enforcement problems at the IRS, it also identifies practical and immediate steps that can be taken by Congress to avert an enforcement breakdown. Essentially, it comes down to Congress' providing the IRS with a steady increase of 2 percent per year over the next 5 years in resources for audits, investigators, and enforcement actions. This increase is not only modest, the numbers show that it will more than pay for itself through the collection of taxes that have improperly been withheld.

Federal tax reform is an important goal, but any reform effort must include a clear-eyed recognition of the growing problem of tax compliance and the need to revitalize the agency charged with ensuring all Americans pay their fair share. Mr. Rossotti was scheduled to bring the enforcement problem to the attention of Congress at a hearing in October, but that hearing was cancelled after, according to press reports, he was asked by the administration not to disclose his report or recommendation for increased enforcement resources.

To further contribute to an understanding of the scope and nature of tax noncompliance, my staff on the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations has been digging into the problems of offshore tax evasion and tax promoters shopping improper tax shelters. I hope to have more to report on these issues early next year.

In the meantime, I urge all my colleagues to read Mr. Rossotti's report in full and take its warnings and advice to heart as we approach tax reform issues in the coming year.

REPORT TO THE IRS OVERSIGHT BOARD—ASSESSMENT OF THE IRS AND THE TAX SYSTEM

As the Board requested, and as my term of office draws to a close, I want to share with you my thoughts on the current state of the IRS, our tax administration system, as well as the opportunities and challenges that the agency and new commissioner will face.

The IRS is today capable of executing its mission with increasing effectiveness and efficiency. We made measurable progress on a number of high priority areas, such as e-filing, telephone and in-person taxpayer service, protection of taxpayer rights and burden reduction. We stabilized and refocused our key compliance activities to make the best use of our limited resources and are identifying and attacking systematic areas of noncompliance, such as the promotion and use of abusive tax devices. Financial management improved, as evidenced by unqualified audit opinions. Internal morale, which was heavily affected by criticism and internal and external change, turned around. Perhaps most importantly, we regained the confidence of the public and other stakeholders.

For the longer term, the IRS created a firm foundation upon which to make further progress. It includes: a modern organization structure with clear accountability for meeting the widely varying needs of specific taxpayer segments; information systems and support organizations capable of supporting operations efficiently while managing modernization; and a planning and management process for allocating resources, assigning goals to managers and measuring progress.

Our Business System Modernization Plan is beginning to deliver tangible benefits to taxpayers and practitioners. Equally important, we have a complete vision and architecture to guide the continuing modernization of every IRS business process and supporting technology.

The plans in place for FY 2003 and FY 2004 reflect aggressive but achievable productivity gains, exceeding those that were historically achieved in the private financial sector.

Taken together, these achievements demonstrate the progress we made over the past five years in the entire way we serve taxpayers, although finishing the job will still take the full decade I originally projected.

However, amidst what I believe is justified optimism for continued improvements in the performance of the IRS lies a critical problem. We are winning the battle, but losing the war. Over the last ten years, the size and complexity of the tax system increased enormously. Beyond the simple increase in number of taxpayers and revenue dollars, the majority of tax revenues now come from sources that are more subject to manipulation by those who wish to pay less than the law requires and much more difficult and time consuming for our agents to uncover. Meanwhile, the size of the IRS declined, not just relatively but in absolute terms, because of budget constraints.

The cumulative effect of these conflicting trends over a 10-year period has been to create a huge gap between the number of taxpayers whom the IRS knows are not filing, not reporting or not paying what they owe, and our capacity to require them to comply.

Recognizing the IRS' diminished capacity, promoters and some tax professionals are selling a wide range of tax schemes and devices designed to improperly reduce taxes to taxpayers based on the simple premise they can get away with it. When this perception becomes increasingly widespread, the essential pillar of our tax system is lost—namely, the belief of honest taxpayers that if someone does not pay what he or she owes, then the IRS will do something about it.

If the trend of the last ten years is allowed to continue, it is only a matter of time until this problem will emerge into the forefront of public consciousness, likely leading to an eruption of criticism such as has occurred periodically in the last 50-year history of the IRS.

Fortunately, it is not too late to solve this problem, nor is it an open-ended problem. In fact, in the past year we succeeded in quantifying better than ever the resources we need. Modernization and internal productivity improvements will provide a major part of the needed gains. However, these alone will not be sufficient to close the gap, even if we assume greater productivity gains than the private sector was able to achieve over a decade.

To succeed, we need more trained personnel to close the known compliance gap while continuing to protect taxpayer rights and provide essential services. Specifically, we must add approximately 2 percent annual net increase in staffing over five years. Even with this increase, the size of the IRS by 2010 would be smaller than it was 20 years earlier in 1990 while the economy will have increased 86 percent.

Over the same period, we must also fund adequate increases for computer modernization programs to accelerate the delivery of key projects and benefits that will provide for greater service, efficiency and productivity.

Together with effective management of the IRS, this modest level of resources can reverse the dangerous trend the tax system is currently taking—but only if it is consistently provided. If, on the other hand, the trend of the past ten years is maintained, in which the demands on tax administration increase and the capacity of the IRS declines, the eventual cost for our nation is certain to be enormous.

STARTING POINT

Before I discuss the opportunities and challenges that lie ahead, it is helpful to place them in their proper historical context.

By the mid-1990s, the public, Congress and most key stakeholders had lost confidence in the IRS. According to the Roper Starch surveys, favorable public opinion of the IRS steadily declined since the early 1980s, reaching an all-time low of 32 percent in 1998. The results of the American Customer Satisfaction Index of key federal agencies were similarly alarming. The IRS measured the lowest of any agency or institution in both surveys.

Taxpayers were not alone in their negative perceptions. Congress and many of our stakeholders also lost confidence in the agency's ability to do its job at an acceptable level. In 1995, the Tax Systems Modernization program was terminated after several billion dollars were spent. Handling complaints about IRS treatment of constituents became a time-consuming duty in many congressional offices, and many stakeholders, especially those representing small business, had an adversarial relationship with the agency.

Poor quality service to taxpayers over the telephone or in person contributed to the public's low perceptions. At the nadir in the mid-1990s, the IRS registered 400 million busy signals a year on its toll-free lines, and when taxpayers did reach the IRS, the likelihood of getting an accurate answer or resolution to a problem was low.

A number of external factors also buffeted the IRS. Budget and staff cuts, rapid economic growth and the shift in the tax base from middle-income wage earners and domestic corporations to upper-income entrepreneurs, passthrough entities and global corporations, all contributed to a diminished capacity to cope with service and compliance demands.

The IRS responded to this pressure by emphasizing enforcement revenue and statistics as a way of justifying its budget. The IRS measured the success of its compliance activities by direct enforcement revenues. This is like a police department assessing its success by the number of traffic tickets written rather than by the safety and security of the community it serves. As we well know from the ensuing fallout, this grave mistake further alienated the public, yet failed to address the systematic, emerging compliance and budget problems.

While emphasizing enforcement statistics, the IRS was also slow to update its compliance practices, such as models used to select returns for audits and the management of the exam and collection processes. Until we changed it recently, $100,000 was the highest income class used by the IRS in assigning exam cases, although people with incomes over $100,000 pay more than 60 percent of the income tax.

Moreover, although exam coverage was declining, many of these examinations concentrated on relatively straightforward issues of deductions or timing differences, such as the use of cash versus accrual accounting by small businesses. Very little emphasis was placed on partnerships and trusts, high-income individuals or offshore accounts, although vast sums of income flow through these entities. There was no specific program to identify and combat promoters of abusive tax devices. The IRS succeeded in winning some tax shelter court cases, but there was no overall strategy for dealing with corporate tax shelters.

ACHIEVING A TURNAROUND

The IRS addressed, although certainly not completely solved, the major problems and internal constraints it faced five years ago. Some are resolved; clear plans are in place to correct the remaining ones over the next five years. This work provided the foundation for steady improvement in the effectiveness and efficiency with which the IRS carries out its mission.

Public confidence in the IRS rebounded. The Roper Starch surveys found our rating increased each of the past three years after 1998's historic low. The University of Michigan's American Customer Satisfaction Index survey released in December 2001 showed greatly improved customer satisfaction among individual taxpayers—the largest favorable gain of the 30 federal agencies surveyed.

In May 2002, the Federal Performance Project, a collaboration of Government Executive Magazine and George Washington University's Department of Public Administration, released its scorecard on federal agencies. The IRS earned a "B-", as compared to a "C" three years ago. While the trend is good, much more remains to be done. The IRS can be and should be managed at the "A" level and is on its way to achieving this.

This turnaround in public confidence reflects the clear progress in five distinct areas: (1) customer service, (2) stakeholder relations, (3) compliance, (4) internal management, and (5) technology and modernization.

Customer service

The customer service improvements were the most visible to individual taxpayers. The upward trend in telephone service was particularly important given how far we had to climb. By the end of the 2002 filing season, taxpayers were receiving correct responses to 83.6 percent of tax law questions and 89.9 of account questions. Access to service and time spent waiting, while still below private sector standards, improved substantially. Average wait time is down 26 percent from the previous year. Assistor access rose from 56 percent only two years ago to nearly 70 percent this year.

Last year, Web site usage smashed all records with 2.7 billion hits and 336 million files downloaded. We are well on our way to a new record this year. Also, in January 2002, we introduced a newly designed and more accessible Web site.

E-filing tripled over the past five years, and this filing season, was up 16 percent over the previous one. We are systematically removing the remaining barriers to e-filing. For example, this year, virtually all 1040 forms and schedules could be filed electronically, and no paper signature document was required. Improved electronic tax administration is also critical to better serving business taxpayers, especially given the number of forms and payments they must file and make. In September 2001, we launched Electronic Federal Tax Payment System On-Line that allows businesses large and small to save precious time by making their federal payments on-line.

We are also building a new e-file system that will grow and serve taxpayers for years to come. Scheduled to start in 2004, it will address the current system's problems. For example, it will accept complex business returns, such as 1120s, eliminate software barriers and resolve standardization issues, such as reject codes and validations.

Service in local taxpayer assistance centers, which was extremely poor in many places, improved in both quality and consistency. However, it will still take several more years to reach fully acceptable standards. Taxpayers can now schedule appointments in more than 400 locations for face-to-face meetings with IRS employees to resolve account or case problems. This helps make the well-received idea of "Problem Solving Days" a regular part of IRS everyday operations. While making these improvements, we are also requiring fewer personnel details from the compliance functions to filing season duty—an expensive and very unpopular practice.

Within the limits of a complex and changing Tax Code, the IRS acted to reduce taxpayer burden. For example, we simplified forms, such as the Schedule D for reporting capital gains. We also rewrote and simplified procedures, such as those for distributions from qualified retirement plans. We removed 2.6 million small business taxpayers from the time-consuming reporting and record-keeping requirements of reconciling tax returns with balance sheets. We eliminated the need for most small businesses to use the more burdensome accrual method of accounting for tax purposes. We implemented a new and much more reliable way of measuring taxpayer burden. In the newly created Office of Taxpayer Burden Reduction, we also have an organization dedicated to continuously measuring and reducing burden.

The IRS implemented 71 taxpayer rights provisions of RRA 98, including such major provisions as collection due process, expanded innocent spouse relief, third party notification and expanded opportunities for offers in compromise. The Taxpayer Advocate Service was established as an effective independent entity within the IRS. It assists taxpayers with hardship cases and makes recommendations to improve the way IRS works for them. Because of these efforts, the number of taxpayers with serious unresolved cases, such as those that generate a need for intervention by a congressional office, declined. More generally, our improved service helped to reduce the numbers of cases needing TAS intervention. In 2002, case receipts fell from 194,790 to 169,390 compared with the same 9-month period in 2001.

Stakeholder relations

In the past, relations with IRS stakeholders were often strained and adversarial. Through improved communications and frequent, substantive meetings, our relationship with Congress, oversight bodies and business groups—especially small businesses—greatly improved. Congressional hearings, once contentious, have been almost universally positive and constructive—although not without tough questioning. Much closer relationships were formed with organizations representing practitioners and small businesses. A consortium was forged with the software industry on the thorny issue of no-cost e-filing.

One of our basic strategies is to develop the kind of stakeholder relationships that can improve the efficiency and effectiveness of our services. Over the past few years, we developed a method of engaging stakeholders as part of our decision-making process. We call the new approach, "Engage and Then Decide" as contrasted with "Decide and Then Explain." Seriously engaging key stakeholders as a regular part of the decision-making process has shown that it improves the final product, shortens the time for decisions and implementation, and strengthens relationships.

Although we successfully used this engagement approach, and have much experience with the hazards and costs of the opposite approach, IRS top management must continue to work hard to ensure that it is employed in all decision-making processes because it is so different from traditional practice in the federal government.

Compliance

As the Board is well aware, we do not have the resources to attack every case of non-compliance. Therefore, we must apply our resources to where non-compliance is greatest while still maintaining adequate coverage in other areas. We must also use carefully, but effectively, the enforcement tools available to us.

After careful study, we identified some of the most serious and current compliance problem areas. These include: (1) promoters of tax schemes of all varieties, (2) the misuse of devices such as trusts and offshore accounts to hide or improperly reduce income, (3) abusive corporate tax shelters, (4) under-reporting of tax by higher-income individuals, and (5) accumulation and the failure to file and pay large amounts of employment taxes by some employers.

To address these problems, we revamped our compliance programs to refocus our resources and to use a full scope of tools and techniques. They range from educating the public, to systematically identifying promoters and participants, to reinvigorating enforcement actions such as summons enforcement, injunctions and criminal investigation of promoters.

If we can eliminate confusion and errors before a return or form is ever filed, America's taxpayers will be spared countless numbers of notices and communications with the IRS. If we can warn taxpayers not to participate in "too good to be true" tax schemes, we can save taxpayers from penalties and more. Moreover, the agency will be in a better position to use its limited compliance resources on the most serious cases of non-compliance.

To achieve these purposes, we created dedicated taxpayer education and pre-filing organizations in our operating divisions, e.g., TEC and SPEC in SB/SE and W&I respectively, and pre-filing technical staffs in LMSB and TEGE. We also created new pre-filing tools, such as pre-filing agreements and industry issue resolution published guidance. We greatly stepped up our output of traditional forms of published guidance, including revenue rulings and notices, by increasing their emphasis in Chief Counsel and forging an effective working relationship with Treasury's Office of Tax Policy.

For example, this past year, both the TEC and SPEC organizations worked to raise public awareness about the slavery reparation schemes. Materials were distributed nationally and locally to African-American churches and religious coalitions, fraternities, sororities and associations, including the NAACP and the Urban League. As a result, the average weekly number of incoming slavery reparation claims declined from 1,538 in CY 2001 to 63 this year.

Although these preventive measures hold great promise, we must still detect, correct and deter non-compliance. We must focus resources, improve efficiency and use our enforcement powers appropriately, all of which we are doing.

As identified through our research and strategic planning, both SB/SE and LMSB are directing their examination resources at the most important cases and issues. Exam and collection reengineering are focused on improving the efficiency with which these cases are carried out. For example, SB/SE is tackling business tax cases, such as unpaid, in-trust taxes, including employment and withholding taxes, much earlier than in the past.

Within two years, our new Filing and Payment compliance modernization program will begin to reduce from several years to six months or less the time required to resolve most collection cases.

Other initiatives, first outlined in our Strategic Plan, are taking effect. Earlier this year, we began matching information reported on Schedule K–1 with income or losses reported on Form 1040 and other schedules. We also reinvigorated the use of long dormant enforcement tools that are needed to deal with serious cases of non-compliance, and especially, promoted tax schemes. For example, we are aggressively identifying promoters and schemes through summonses of records, including John Doe summonses on credit card accounts in offshore tax havens and vendor summonses to refine that data.

Multiple approaches were taken to aggressively attack the use of abusive tax shelters. The LMSB organization initiated 43 contacts of promoters to uncover lists of taxpayers participating in their shelters. In addition, a tax shelter disclosure initiative was launched earlier this year. As of August 1, 2002, the IRS processed 1,664 disclosures from 1,206 taxpayers who came forward. These disclosures cover 2,264 tax returns and involved more than $30 billion in claimed losses or deductions. Moreover, we announced a new policy in June 2002 to request tax accrual work papers when we audit returns that claim a tax benefit from certain tax avoidance transactions that we identified as abusive.

Civil and Criminal Lead Development Centers (LDC) were also established to identify cases of abusive tax promoters. For example, the Civil LDC works leads received from within the IRS, or from external sources, and conducts Internet searches looking for abusive tax promoters and promotional materials.

Also, the Webster Report gave a detailed blueprint for making Criminal Investigation a more effective component of tax administration. The need to refocus CI's resources on tax cases was the centerpiece of this report. CI's top priority is now investigating promoters and participants in illegal tax schemes. We also established a closer working relationship between field counsel and the operating divisions on compliance work.

This new emphasis on action against promoters has already shown results. The numbers of actions related to promoters went from "none" to a vigorous program. As of July 8, 2002, we had nine promoter injunctions granted, 11 promoter injunctions pending in District Court and three pending at the Department of Justice, 150 promoter exams and information requests underway, and 51 ongoing criminal investigations (numbers are for FY 01 through 02).

Also, key to successfully executing our compliance program is better data. As I discussed, the IRS failed to detect new areas of non-compliance in part because of a reliance on increasingly obsolete data from the old Taxpayer Compliance Measurement Program. (TCMP was last conducted in 1988.) In addition, we designed and are now implementing a National Research Program that will obtain the essential information with far less burden on the taxpayer. New scoring models are being developed using 21st century techniques, with interim models already deployed.

Obviously, our success in compliance also depends on a cadre of highly qualified trained individuals to perform tasks that require a high level of judgment. After a freeze of nearly six years, recruitment for professional occupations, such as revenue agent and revenue officer, restarted; training was completely revamped and improved; and employee engagement became part of balanced measures and everyday management.

Internal management

The IRS successfully made the transition to a modern customer-focused organization in which a management team has clear responsibility for meeting the needs of a specific set of taxpayers. The service needs and compliance issues of the 90 million taxpayers with wage and investment income are vastly different from those of large and mid-sized businesses, which in turn are different from those of small businesses and tax-exempt organizations. One team now works full time to understand and meet the needs of each set of taxpayers and has nationwide authority to execute its plans, eliminating the historically deep and counterproductive organizational separation between the "field" and the "national office."

Supporting these operating divisions are specialized functional units and shared services organizations to provide information technology and common support services throughout the organization.

As part of the reorganization, the number of management layers was reduced and the role of executives and senior managers is being redirected towards substantive engagement in tax administration, rather than predominantly administrative duties. A new model of executive recruitment was successfully established, which includes a recruitment of a limited number of highly experienced top executives from private industry and other government agencies to complement our internally-developed executives.

Many specialized programs, ranging from processing business returns to handling innocent spouse claims to answering tax law calls, are being consolidated into fewer locations with fewer management layers. This enables greater standardization and faster implementation of improvements.

An entirely new system of balanced measures has been designed and implemented, aligning goals throughout the organization down to the territory and site level.

The gains in service and the widespread redirection of compliance programs over the last two years reflect the benefits of a more customer-focused and accountable organization. The major benefits are still to come, in the form of continuous improvements in productivity and quality in every major program.

The improvements in customer service and other programs can also be linked to increased employee engagement in our mission and goals, increased and improved training and heightened focus on employee concerns. Among the most important of these concerns was the fair and careful administration of Section 1203—the so called ten deadly sins—so that no employee was wrongly disciplined under this section. In addition, legislative proposals were formulated and are under consideration by Congress to alleviate employee anxiety over Section 1203.

Because of these actions and focus, and according to a recent Gallup survey of IRS employees, the level of engagement within the Service increased from 49th to the 56th percentile of all public sector organizations tracked by the organization.

The IRS is also the steward of massive taxpayer revenue and budget and financial resources, and we are expected to properly account for the government's money and property. To this end, internal accounting standards were raised to a higher level. For the past two fiscal years, we received unqualified GAO opinions on our financial statements for both the Revenue and Administrative accounts. This year, we have plans in place to close the books months earlier than in prior years and to address remaining material weaknesses over the next two years.

As our FY 2003 and 2004 budget requests demonstrate, strategic planning, budgeting, resource allocation and performance goals were aligned. For the first time, we fully integrated development of our budget with the establishment of performance measures.

Technology and modernization

Critical to our success was better managing our massive technology and Business Systems Modernization program. From 15 separate information systems operations, we created one MITS organization that has the job of serving all of our operating units and managing our modernization program.

As part of this major transition, standards were established and largely implemented for hardware and software. We consolidated mainframes from 12 centers to three and established one standard for desktop and laptop hardware and software. We implemented a nationwide e-mail and voice messaging systems, standard office automation software, and security certifications and standards. We deployed important interim applications systems, including Intelligent Call Routing, Integrated Case Processing and the Integrated Collection System.

Business Systems Modernization laid the foundation for success of this massive program. Both the long-term vision and enterprise architecture were established and embedded as a living blueprint for all business and technology improvement programs.

BSM began delivering projects with tangible and meaningful benefits to taxpayers, such as moving the first set of taxpayers to a modern, reliable database early next year. Over the next five years, all individual taxpayers will be moved to it, cutting times for refunds on e-filed returns to less than a week and allowing us to provide taxpayer and employees with up-to-the-minute accuracy on their accounts. Of paramount importance, we implemented the first project on our new security system, which provides one standard for ensuring the security of all future IRS data and systems.

All major management processes, which are needed to manage this program on a continuing basis, were improved. Our goal is to obtain certification in the near future as only the second agency in the federal government to reach Level Two in the Software Engineering Institutions Capability Maturity Model.

STEADY PROGRESS CAN CONTINUE YEAR AFTER YEAR

The aforementioned progress and achievements do not mean that the IRS solved all of its problems, or that there are no more opportunities to improve. Rather, it means that the IRS addressed the major impediments and obstacles that previously stood in the way of progress and has a clear committed plan to continually reach even higher levels of performance. There should be no doubt that the IRS can be raised to a level of quality and efficiency comparable to the best managed financial services organizations.

WINNING THE BATTLE BUT LOSING THE WAR

Despite significant improvements in the management of the IRS, the health of the federal tax administration system is on a serious long-term downtrend. This is systematically undermining one of the most important foundations of the American economy.

The source of this problem is two conflicting long-term trends: one, ever increasing demands on the tax administration system due to rapid growth in the size and complexity of the economy; and two, a steady decline in IRS resources due to budget constraints. The cumulative effect of these conflicting trends over a 10-year period has been to create a huge gap between the number of taxpayers who are not filing, not reporting or not paying what they owe, and the IRS' capacity to require them to comply.

As seen in the next chart, "Trends in Indicators of IRS Workload and Resources," from 1992 to 2001, weighted average returns filed, a measure of overall IRS workload, increased by 16 percent because of the economy's growth. However, during this same period, FTEs dropped 16 percent from 115,205 in FY 1992 to 95,511 in FY 2001. Since more and more of the IRS' declining resources are required to perform essential operational functions—such as processing returns, issuing refunds and answering taxpayer mail—a disproportionate reduction occurred in Field Compliance personnel, falling 28 percent from 29,730 in FY 1992 to 21,421 in FY 2002.

In assessing these trends, it is extremely important to recognize a critical fact: tax administration workload increases every year because of increased filings by taxpayers related to the long-term growth of the economy. These workload increases affect every facet of tax administration, from processing returns to answering correspondence to collecting delinquent returns to accounting for payments and refunds. In addition to this growth related to the economy, tax legislation often adds additional workload.

Looking more closely at the most recent five years (see chart), we see that the number of income tax returns increased by 12 million, while 19 tax bills were passed that changed 292 tax code sections and required 515 changes to forms and instructions. On the average, IRS workload grows at a compounded rate of 1.8 percent per year. Therefore, just to handle this increased workload, the IRS would either have to add staff—which is what occurred fairly consistently for the 45-year period from 1950 through 1995—or would have to increase productivity by 1.8 percent per year just to stay even.

FEDERAL TAX SYSTEM HAS BEEN GROWING AND CHANGING RAPIDLY FROM 1997 THROUGH 2002

Volume of activity has been growing rapidly

Income Tax Returns: 12 Million Increase—9.4%.

IRS Gross Collections: $527 Billion Increase—32.5%.

IRS Refunds Issued: $121 Billion Increase—61.3%.

Tax Code has been changing rapidly

19 Public Laws passed.

293 Tax Code provisions changed.

171 (58%) of provisions with concurrent or retroactive effective dates.

515 completed changes to forms and/or instructions.

Restructuring and Reform Act added many taxpayer rights

71 taxpayer rights.

1,900 implementing actions.

Hundreds of thousands of new transactions per year.

Innocent spouse.

Collection due process.

Offers in compromise.

Third party notification.

Section 1203 allegations.

Special events created additional activity and change

Century date change required massive three year project.

Advance rate reduction credit—126 million notices, 91 million taxpayers, $39 billion.

Returns of political organizations (section 527)—new reporting to IRS.

September 11th terrorist attack—victims relief, IRS security response, money laundering task forces.

Anthrax threat—rapid response required prior to 2002 Filing Season.

Globalization is increasing international tax activity

U.S. controlled foreign corporations up 25%.

Foreign controlled corporations up 31%.

Resources have been shrinking

IRS full-time equivalent personnel: −2,952.

This is no different from a car company producing 1.8 percent more cars or a hospital servicing 1.8 percent more patients. But, rather than increasing staff, IRS staff decreased during this period, creating a major gap in IRS capacity to administer the tax system.

In addition to growth in raw numbers, the tax revenue stream is now dominated by sources that provide greater opportunities for manipulation by those who wish to take advantage of the decline in IRS compliance resources. For example, returns for taxpayers with incomes exceeding $100,000 grew by 342 percent over 1991 levels. The enormous amounts of money that flow through "pass-through" entities—such as partnerships, trusts and S-corporations—also adds to the complexity of tax administration and increases the opportunities for underreporting of income. In Tax Year 2000, these "pass-through" entities filed 4.78 million returns with gross revenue of $6 trillion and income to partners/shareholders of more than $660 billion.

The IRS Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 added major new or expanded taxpayer rights programs, such as innocent spouse relief, third party notification and collection due process. The rights are very important to taxpayers but created very substantial additional resource demands on the IRS to process hundreds of thousands of new transactions and additional steps in existing audits and collection actions.

Business globalization creates another administration complexity and more opportunities for reducing U.S.-reported income. From 1997–2002, U.S.-controlled foreign corporations and foreign-controlled corporations grew respectively by 25 and 31 percent.

Looking at this imbalance, one fact emerges. The IRS is simply out-numbered when it comes to dealing with the compliance risks. As noted, IRS employment (FTEs), and in particular, Field Compliance FTE steadily declined. With the decline in personnel came a decline in the coverage of all types of returns (see chart). Even after we refocus on the most egregious non-compliance cases, we can only handle a small fraction of them.

The effect of these trends was to create a gap in what work the IRS should be doing and what it had the capacity to do. In the last two years, the IRS made progress in quantifying this gap, which is summarized below. As noted, the majority of the workload gap is in compliance.

For each category of compliance, the IRS computed the number of known cases of taxpayers who did not file or pay, or who substantially underreported their taxes. These numbers, therefore, represent not general estimates or assumptions, but specific taxpayer cases. Based on the information available to the IRS, they should and could be treated as cases of non-compliance through collection, audit or other actions.

However, as can be seen from the chart, only a fraction of each category of case, even the most serious, can be worked with available resources. The "gap" represents the number of cases that should be, but cannot be worked because of resource limitations. These cases represent tens of billions of dollars per year that could be, but are not collected. More importantly, they represent a failure of fairness to the millions of honest taxpayers whose commitment to paying their taxes is based on the assumption that the IRS will act if they or their neighbors do not pay their fair share.

Tax professionals, promoters, sophisticated taxpayers and even some ordinary taxpayers are becoming more aware of our deteriorating ability to deal with compliance. Increasingly, this issue is being reported by publications ranging from The Wall Street Journal, the New York Times, Fortune and Forbes, and even on national television.

Recognizing the IRS' diminished capacity, promoters and some tax professionals are selling a wide range of schemes and devices to taxpayers based on the simple premise they can probably get away with it. When this perception becomes increasingly widespread, the essential pillar of the fairness of our tax system is lost.

Our John Doe summonses of records for credit cards issued by offshore banks in tax haven countries revealed one facet of the problem. Just one of these summons, issued in 2000 to MasterCard, yielded a large database of transactions by those using cards issued by banks in Antigua, Barbuda, the Bahamas and the Cayman Islands. Many of these taxpayers were solicited through various channels by a variety of promoters.

Indeed, some sophisticated tax professionals, including those in accounting and law firms and investment banks, are aggressively marketing tax shelters to their clients. Some of these turn out to be abusive tax avoidance transactions prohibited by the Treasury Department.

Demand is also driving up supply. There is widespread anecdotal evidence from honest practitioners about clients demanding that their return preparer find a way to reduce reported income, to the point of refusing advice from honest professionals to comply with required reporting and disclosure. In effect, they are saying, "Get me one of these deals or I will take my business elsewhere." This has reached the point where recently a former IRS Commissioner was faxed a solicitation from a "Senior Investment Manager" that began, "As we approach December 31st, you may have a large income tax liability for the year 2002. The amount you pay could be up to you."

Although it is impossible to prove conclusively that attitudes towards tax compliance shifted, we must make informed judgments about behavior and trends. The only responsible conclusion I can draw is that the trend in attitudes of taxpayers and tax professionals poses a real threat to the health of the tax system and ultimately to the American economy.

If these problems and conditions are left unaddressed, we could face an enormous crisis in confidence in the tax administration system. It would not be surprising if this problem emerged into the forefront of public concern, causing an eruption about the IRS similar to those that occurred periodically over the last 50 years. The long-term impact on the economy and our nation of not reversing this trend will be extremely high.

WHAT IS NEEDED

What is the answer? Fortunately, the problem is not open-ended and can be solved with a reasonable amount of resources. We need what the National Commission on Restructuring the IRS argued for five years ago: a steady and consistent budget. It must consist of two items over the next five years. The first is a steady growth in staff in the range of 2 percent per year. The second is steadily increased funding for modernization until this program levels off several years from now.

Together with aggressive increases in productivity, as called for by the IRS Strategic Plan, this combination can solve the problem by the end of this decade. In fact, as shown in the "Closing the Gap" chart below, a combination of 2 percent per year staff growth with 3 percent per year productivity growth will keep up with increasing demand and close the gap by 2010. But without both elements—modest but steady staff growth and aggressive productivity increases—the trend will not be reversed.

Computer systems alone, even with the most aggressive reasonable assumptions about the productivity gains from modernization, cannot solve the problem. Trained and effective staff is also required. However, modernization will allow the IRS to perform the tax administration function with proportionately fewer staff than in the past. If the IRS staff grew by 2 percent per year through 2010, the total staff would still be smaller than it was 20 years earlier (1990), while the economy is projected to be 86 percent larger in real GDP and the tax system far more complex.

There is another critical point. Sufficient funding must be provided to fund the actual projected staffing. There is no "extra" funding lying around to "absorb" items that are mandated, but not paid for. As shown below, the IRS dollar budget consistently underfunded advertised staffing levels. The actual number of FTEs is lower every year than proposed in the budget. This is the effect of making unrealistically optimistic assumptions about such items as pay raises, inflation and other mandates, including specific mailing and notification requirements.

IRS DOLLAR BUDGET HAS CONSISTENTLY UNDER-FUNDED ADVERTISED STAFFING LEVEL

[Full Time Equivalent (FTE) Personnel without EITC]

	FY 2000	FY 2001	FY 2002	FY 2003	FY 2004
FY 2000 President's Budget	96,767
FY 2001 President's Budget	95,523	98,051	*99,873
FY 2002 President's Budget	95,155	97,273	99,116
FY 2003 President's Budget		95,511	97,548	98,727
FY 2004 Treasury Submission			97,423	96,182	98,182

* Includes 1,822 FTE for STABLE Annualization.

Our plan already requires very rapid and sustained productivity growth of over 3 percent per year—in excess of the 2 to 2.4 percent achieved in the private sector. It supposes complete success of BSM, aggressive reallocation of internal resources, such as eliminating some submissions processing centers, rapid growth of e-filing, and use of productivity enhancing techniques, such as competitive sourcing for some activities. These items make it possible to cope with growth in filings and filling the gap in required workload with very limited staff growth, but do not make it possible in addition to "absorb" unfunded but required line items.

SIMPLIFYING THE TAX CODE

Most informed observers are justifiably horrified at the complexity of the Tax Code. The cost of taxpayer compliance with this code is over $80 billion per year, more than eight times the cost of the IRS budget. The sheer size and complexity in itself can be a source of disrespect for the law. Therefore, it is a worthy, though difficult and uncertain, challenge to pursue simplification to the maximum extent possible.

However, there is no proposal that has been seriously advanced for simplification that would have any significant effect in the foreseeable future on the problem of IRS resources.

Apart from the fact that even simplifying changes take time and effort to develop, pass in Congress and to implement, the reality is that the gap in IRS resources is so large that nearly all of our resources are required to perform the basic operations of the tax system and to pursue the clearest and most important cases of non-compliance.

With the exception of some resources in the large corporate sector, the IRS redirected nearly all compliance resources away from less significant technical tax issues to cope with current operational requirements and the most serious cases of non-filing, nonpayment or underreporting of income. Even then, resources are far below what is required.

The only reasonable course is to pursue parallel paths: to address the practical problem the tax administration system faces by gradually closing the gap in the capacity of the IRS to perform its essential tasks, while pursuing a parallel path attempting tax simplification.

CONCLUSION

Five years ago, the IRS embarked on a new direction. Following it, we achieved much progress for America's taxpayers, although we have much more left to do to improve the entire way the IRS works. Today, we are faced with a growing crisis—in our ability to do our job and the fairness of our tax system. We cannot turn our back on this crisis or believe that it will go away, because it will not. But like five years ago, I believe the problem is solvable. We know the right course of action and we should have the courage and resolve to take it.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO GUIDE DOGS

• Mrs. CLINTON. Madam President, after reading an article in The Saturday Evening Post about the Germans training dogs to aid veterans blinded during World War I, a blind man living in Tennessee named Morris Frank wrote to the author, "Thousands of blind like me abhor being dependent on others. Help me and I will help them. Train me and I will bring back my dog and show people here how a blind man can be absolutely on his own." The author, Dorothy Harrison Eustis agreed to Mr. Frank's request, and Mr. Frank's dog Buddy became the first guide dog in America.

That was 1929 and today, there are more than 7,000 guide dogs serving in America, and two performed miracles in New York on September 11.

That morning, Roselle, a yellow Labrador Retriever and her owner, Michael Hingson, went to the office on the 78th floor of the World Trade Center. While Mr. Hingson worked, Roselle slept underneath his desk. Then the plane hit the South Tower, and what she did next was nothing short of heroic. She guided Mr. Hingson through the smoke and to the stairwell. Not only did Roselle help Mr. Hingson down 78 flights of stairs, but another woman who had been blinded by debris clutched Roselle's harness until they reached safety.

There was another yellow lab in the World Trade Center named Salty. His owner, Omar Rivera, worked on the 71st floor of the Port Authority. After the planes hit, Salty refused to leave Omar's side and walked through the smoke-filled stairway, broken glass and debris to get Mr. Rivera and a coworker to safety. Even as the North Tower collapsed and the debris cloud filled the streets, Salty remained calm, loyal, and focused on guiding Mr. Rivera to a place free from danger.

These two guide dogs performed their jobs under the most extreme circumstances. But what they did that day reinforced what guide dogs do every day—they provide independence to individuals who are blind and visually impaired so that they can live their life free from constraints. To serve as another's set of eyes, to navigate busy city streets, and to keep their owners from harm's way is a responsibility that only a loyal dog would welcome with no questions asked.

Throughout the United States and around the world, Guide Dog Schools have given more than one hundred thousand people the chance to move about the world with freedom and dignity. Each school offers their guide dogs at no cost to the owners. All they have to do is apply, attend training, and promise to care for their dog for the rest of his or her life. The success of each school is dependent upon thousands of staff, volunteers, and generous supporters. Many people volunteer to raise puppies, socialize them and then give them up at the end of the year. And we see these dogs every day sitting patiently on the subway, stopping at walk lights, and maneuvering people around hazards that prevent a safe, straight path. They wear bright colored vests that read "Guide Dog in Training."

Not only did Morris Frank bring the first guide dog to America, he opened the first school in 1929, The Seeing Eye. Now in every State, guide dog schools provide an invaluable service. In California, The Guide Dog School just celebrated its 60th Anniversary, and in New York, The Guide Dog Foundation in Smithtown, has assisted New Yorkers and others from around the world since 1946. And Guiding Eyes for the Blind in Yorktown Heights has graduated more than 5,000 dogs and owners since 1954.

Each success story is testament that one good idea can transform the lives of many. But the success of the guide dog schools would not have occurred without two key components: those who believed that the blind and visually impaired could lead more independent lives with the right kind of help, and the dogs, the Labrador Retrievers, the Golden Retrievers, the German Shepherds, and other breeds that are ready, willing, and able to guide their owners through the world.

Every day, thousands of people grab on to the harness and place their trust in their companion. Some have acted with remarkable heroism like those on September 11, and we have all heard the stories about guide dogs waking their owners in the event of a fire and blocking them from the path of a speeding car. But most go through their days with quiet dignity and they deserve our utmost respect. Whether they are named Roselle or Salty or Buddy, they all respond in the same way. That harness goes on, their eyes open, and they show us that it is possible to walk through this world with a profound desire to help another so that life is limitless.●

RECOGNIZING MOTT CHILDREN'S HEALTH CENTER

● Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I wish to express my heartfelt congratulations to the Mott Children's Health Center (MCHC), in Flint, MI, which has been selected by the American Lung Association of Michigan-Genesee Valley Region as the 2002 Corporate Health Advocate of the Year.

The American Health and Lung Association of Michigan-Genesee Valley Region grants this prestigious award to an organization that aspires to restrict or ban smoking, offers employee programs for smoking cessation, or exhibits respect and sensitivity to those suffering with lung disease. Winners must demonstrate financial support to local non-profit agencies as well as encourage employees to sit on local boards of directors for community based non-profit organizations. Recipients also need to display a commitment to improving the quality of life of Genesee Valley's residents. MCHC has not only met but far surpassed the American Health and Lung Association's criteria, and is a worthy recipient of this award.

Founded in 1939 by Charles Stuart Mott, MCHC's mission is to better the lives of Genesee County's at-risk youth through health services and community advocacy. As a health service provider, MCHC offers the Genesee County community both emotional and physical pediatric health services, educates families on health-related issues, and supports local schools and neighborhoods with on-site health care. In order to inform community decision makers on issues related to Genesee County's children's health needs, MCHC sponsors events on matters affecting children's health, supports various state and local children's advocacy organizations, and develops educational materials on children's issues. In its 63-year history, MCHC has expanded to become a principal in child health advocacy in the Genesee Valley community and throughout Michigan.

MCHC is a recognized leader in the battle against childhood asthma, an illness that affects 15 percent of Genesee County's children. As part of the Childhood Asthma Task Force, (CATF), MCHC provides staff and other resources, including a home to CATF's three Mini Asthma Resource Centers. MCHC nurses, who dedicate themselves to educating families about asthma and available treatments, staff these CATF centers. Additionally, in its continuing effort to highlight children's respiratory health issues, last year MCHC sponsored the 29th Annual Tuuri Day Conference, which addressed topics such as "New Approaches to Pediatric Asthma" and "Smoking Among Children and Families."

MCHC has a long and impressive history of advocacy for the children of Genesee Valley. I know my colleagues join me in congratulating Mott Children's Health Center for being named the 2002 Corporate Health Advocate of the Year and wishing them continued success.●

RECOGNIZING GLORIA R. BOURDON

● Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, I wish to express my sincerest congratulations to Gloria R. Bourdon of Michigan who has recently been recognized by the American Lung Association of Michigan-Genessee Valley Region as the 2002 Individual Health Advocate of the Year.

The American Lung Association of Michigan-Genesee Valley Region awards this honor to an individual who has served as board member on a health association or participated in a health related activity for at least 5 years. Recipients must contribute to the community's health, education, and general well-being. The individual must have been involved in promoting health care research, contributing to articles on health care, and involved in lung health care advocacy. Gloria Bourdon has not only met these criteria but has far exceeded them; for this she is a worthy recipient of this prestigious award.

Gloria Bourdon's promotion of children's health issues began in 1970 as a teacher in Pinconning and Linden Areas Schools, where she taught students to lead healthy lifestyles. As the Director of Health, Safety and Nutrition Services for the Genesee Intermediate School District, Gloria is now responsible for the health and safety of the children in 55 public schools, public academies, and private schools. She is also an active member of the community. She supports many coalitions including Priority Children, Childhood Asthma Task Force, and the Genesee County Curriculum Council. Her outstanding work and dedication have been recognized by various organizations. Most recently, Gloria received the Genesee County Child Advocacy Award, the Michigan Association of School Board's Health and Safety Award, and the Rainmaker Award from HealthPlus.

Gloria's dedication to children's health is evident in her writing and fundraising efforts. In 1998, she authored a Health Action Team Manual for Substance Abuse Education, Physical Activity, Nutrition Education, and Safe and Drug Free School Zones. She has assisted the American Lung Association in efforts regarding asthma, tobacco and air-quality awareness. Gloria also encourages her nursing and teaching staff to support the Association's goals.

I join the American Lung Association of Michigan-Genesee Valley Region in congratulating Gloria on her great accomplishments in promoting the health and safety of the children in Genesee County and surrounding areas. I know that my colleagues in the Senate will support me in thanking Gloria Bourdon for her efforts and wishing her well in her future endeavors.●

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. REED (for himself and Mr. DEWINE):

S. 3158. A bill to establish a grant program to provide comprehensive eye examinations to children, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the "Children's Vision Improvement and Learning Readiness Act." I am pleased to be joined by my colleague from Ohio, Senator DEWINE, in this effort. Vision disorders are the fourth most common disability in the United States and the most prevalent handicapping condition among children. This is a startling fact when one considers that eighty percent of what children learn is acquired through vision processing information and the quality of children's eye health has a direct impact on their learning and achievement.

It is estimated that almost ten percent of children have clinically significant vision impairments, which are associated with developmental delays and the need for special education, vocational, and social services. Specifically, studies have found that among the twenty percent of school age children who have a learning disability in reading, seventy percent have some form of visual impairment, such as ocular motor, perceptual or binocular dysfunction, that could interfere with their reading skills. The "Children's Vision Improvement and Learning Readiness Act" recognizes the importance of diagnosing vision disorders in children at an early age so as to allow intervention at a time when these disorders are highly responsive to treatment.

Unfortunately, too many children in school today live with an undiagnosed vision impairment and too many times these same children have not had a comprehensive eye examination prior to entering school. In fact, only one-third of all children have had an eye examination or vision screening prior to entering school despite evidence that the earlier a vision problem is diagnosed and corrected, the less the potential negative impact it may have on a child's development.

In addition, undiagnosed visual problems impose economic costs on our Nation. In 1995, the economic impact of visual disorders and disabilities was approximately $38.4 billion. Yet, early, comprehensive eye exams in children can help reduce the economic and social costs associated with undiagnosed eye disorders. Providing comprehensive eye examinations to children before they enter school helps to decrease long-term medical expenditures, prevent inappropriate placement of children in special education programs, and avoid social welfare spending by improving children's ability to learn and achieve a greater degree of educational and economic attainment.

The "Children's Vision Improvement and Learning Readiness Act" gives the Secretary of Health and Human Services the authority to provide grants to States for a variety of educational and outreach activities related to improving and safeguarding the eye health and academic success of our nation's children. Grants may be used for the development of a voluntary statewide school-based comprehensive eye examination program for elementary school age children; the development of State-based education programs to increase public awareness of the benefits of comprehensive eye examinations; and the flexibility of providing comprehensive eye examinations through other related federal programs, such as Head Start, the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, the Child Care Block Grant, and the Consolidated Health Centers programs.

This important measure will help ensure that our nation's children have access to comprehensive eye examinations from qualified health professionals so they can start school prepared for a lifetime of learning and achievement. I urge my colleagues to join me and Senator DEWINE in supporting this legislation that will help to boost the well-being and academic achievement of our nation's school children.

By Mr. FEINGOLD (for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. JEFFORDS):

S. 3161. A bill to provide a definition of a prevailing party for Federal fee-shifting statutes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FEINGOLD. Madam President, I am pleased today to introduce the Settlement Encouragement and Fairness Act of 2002. This bill provides that when plaintiffs bring a lawsuit that acts as a catalyst for a change in position by the opposing party, they will be considered the "prevailing party" for purposes of recovering attorneys' fees under Federal law. The bill will help ensure that people who are the victims of civil rights, environmental, and worker rights' abuses can obtain legal representation to enforce their rights.

Over the course of our history, Congress has often enacted laws encouraging private litigants to implement public policy through our court system. An integral part of many such laws are provisions that help individuals obtain adequate legal representation by providing that the defendants will pay the plaintiffs' attorneys' fees in cases where the plaintiff prevails. In laws involving public accommodations, housing, labor, disabilities, age discrimination, violence against women, voting rights, pollution, and other areas, Congress has acted over and over again to empower private litigants in their pursuit of justice. Currently, there are over two hundred statutory fee-shifting provisions that allow for some sort of payment of attorneys' fees to a prevailing plaintiff.

Until last year, in interpreting these fee-shifting statutes in cases where a settlement was reached before trial, nine circuit courts of appeals embraced the "catalyst theory" to determine whether attorneys' fees could be obtained. The catalyst theory required the payment of fees where the lawsuit caused a change in the position or conduct of the defendant. Only one circuit court, the Fourth Circuit, applied a more narrow definition of prevailing party, requiring a judgment or a court approved settlement in order for a plaintiff to obtain attorneys' fees.

In Buckhannon Board of Care & Home Inc. v. West Virginia Department of Health and Human Services, 2001, a case arising out of the Fourth Circuit, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled, in a 5–4 decision, that plaintiffs may recover attorneys' fees from defendants only if they have been awarded relief by a court, not if they prevailed through a voluntary change in the defendant's behavior or a private settlement. The Buckhannon ruling eliminated the catalyst theory for all fee shifting statutes in federal law.

The bill I introduce today restores the catalyst theory that the vast majority of courts had approved prior to the Buckhannon decision as a basis for seeking attorneys fees under Federal fee shifting statutes. It provides a new definition of "prevailing party" for all such statutes to encompass the common situation where defendants alter their conduct after a lawsuit has commenced but without waiting for a court order requiring them to do so. This critical change in the definition of "prevailing party" will allow attorneys representing clients who cannot otherwise afford to hire a lawyer to recover their costs and to be paid a reasonable rate for their work.

The Buckhannon case itself illustrates the need for this legislation. Buckhannon Board and Care Home in West Virginia, an operator of assisted living residences, failed a state inspection because some residents were incapable of "self-preservation" as defined by State law. After receiving orders to close its facilities, Buckhannon sued the State seeking declaratory and injunctive relief that the "self-preservation" requirement violated the Fair Housing Amendments Act and the Americans with Disabilities Act. While the lawsuit was pending but before the court ruled, the state legislature eliminated the "self-preservation" requirement.

Imagine how the plaintiffs felt when they learned that their lawsuit had forced a change in the law not only for their own case but also for all of the other individuals who had been subject to the improper self-preservation doctrine. If ever there was a complete and total victory caused by litigation, this was it. But, as Casey Stengel once said, "It ain't over 'till it's over." Once the State legislature changed the law, the District Court granted defendant's motion to dismiss the case as moot and denied Buckhannon's request for attorneys' fees. The court ruled that the legislative action did not amount to a judicially required change in position that would permit Buckhannon to be considered a "prevailing party" in the case. On appeal, the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit and then the U.S. Supreme Court denied attorneys' fees for the plaintiffs, ruling that because the change in the defendants' conduct was voluntary rather than ordered by the court, Buckhannon was not a prevailing party.

I believe the narrow definition of "prevailing party" endorsed by the Buckhannon decision will result in many injustices going unchallenged. Indeed, in calculating whether to take a case, an attorney for a plaintiff will have to consider not only the chances of losing, but the chances of winning too easily. If businesses or individuals are able to engage in egregious conduct, refuse to change their behavior without a lawsuit being filed against them, and then avoid paying attorneys' fees by changing their conduct on the eve of trial, the effect will be that some lawyers will decide that they cannot afford to take a case even if the claims are very strong.

Imagine a case involving a legitimate claim of housing discrimination where, after many months, perhaps even years of work, as the attorney for the plaintiff prepares into the evening for opening statements, the attorney learns that the defendant has admitted its wrongful conduct and offered substantial compensation and a promise to change its practices. This offer came about only because of the spotlight the lawsuit put on the defendant and the possibility of a large jury verdict. This would be a complete victory for the plaintiff, but under Buckhannon, the attorney who labored for years to bring about this result may not be paid. Later, if the same defendant returns to discriminatory practices, the next plaintiff might very well not be able to find competent counsel who will take the case.

Ironically, the failure to correct the Buckhannon decision could lead to plaintiffs' attorneys dragging out law suits, out far beyond a point in time where the parties could reach a fair settlement, in order to insure that they meet the Buckhannon definition of "prevailing party." This will increase the costs of litigation and discourage settlement. Simply put, Buckhannon creates unnatural tensions between attorneys and clients and may even push attorneys to not act in the best interest of their clients.

Certainly we can do better. Congress has passed important laws to protect the public in the work place and in our communities; we must ensure that these laws can be enforced, when necessary, in court. The Settlement Encouragement and Fairness Act of 2002 will help insure that all our citizens have the ability to meaningfully challenge injustice.

By Mr. DURBIN (for himself, Mr. NELSON of Florida, Mr. CLELAND, and Mr. EDWARDS):

S. 3162. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, to enhance the security of transporting high-level nuclear waste and spend nuclear fuel, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to improve the safety of nuclear waste transportation across our Nation. This bill, the Nuclear Waste Transportation Security Act of 2002, seeks to address the concerns raised by the Congress' decision earlier this year to transport spent nuclear fuel to Yucca Mountain, NV, for underground storage. Joining me in its introduction are Senators CLELAND, EDWARDS, and NELSON.

I voted in favor of moving nuclear waste to Yucca Mountain. My decision was not a simple one; rather its ramifications required serious consideration. At that time, I predicated my "yes" vote on the waste being transported safely and securely through my home State of Illinois and across our Nation, and I indicated that I would introduce legislation to improve that safety and security. This is that legislation.

The Nuclear Waste Transportation Security Act directs the Secretary of Transportation to establish a comprehensive transportation safety program that considers terrorist threats and other potential dangers to the safe transportation of this spent fuel. The Department of Transportation, the regulator of these shipments, will consult with numerous cabinet and sub-cabinet offices, including the soon to be created Department of Homeland Security, to develop this program. After one year, the Secretary will deliver a progress report to Congress on the program's development and implementation.

To better assist State, local, and tribal governments in implementing this program, our bill establishes a grant program at DOT related to the transportation of nuclear spent fuel. First responders will be eligible for these grants, which will emphasize frequently used routes. The grants will be used for infrastructure improvements, drills and training, and other activities as determined by the Secretary. DOE and the Federal Radiological Preparedness Coordinating Committee, FRPCC, of FEMA will consult on the grant program. For this purpose, the bill authorizes $3,000,000 for fiscal year 2003 and additional funds as necessary for fiscal years 2004 through 2012.

A key component of spent nuclear fuel transportation is ensuring the safety and security of routes nationwide. Much of this fuel is likely to be transported through my own State of Illinois, right through the center of Chicago and Springfield, our State capitol. I want to be certain that its transport does not endanger my constituents in any way. The Department of Energy ranks Illinois seventh in truck shipments under what is called the "mostly truck scenario," and sixth in rail shipments in the "mostly rail scenario." Nearly half of Illinois' electricity is generated from nuclear power. With seven nuclear power plants and two nuclear research reactors Illinois produces more nuclear waste than any other State and is home to some of the busiest transportation corridors in the Nation. The safety of Illinoisans is at stake. These stakes are too high for us to gamble. Safety must be a top priority.

To ensure this safety, my bill requires that the DOT consult with State governments in establishing routes and provide 14-days' notice to governors of shipments through their States. The bill requires dedicated trains for the waste with trained guards stationed at the front and rear ends of each train. The bill provides the Secretary of Transportation and the Director of Homeland Security with waiver authority for national or homeland security. Under my legislation, trains must be equipped with communication systems providing continuous access to first responders and must be equipped with the best available technology, including appropriate health monitoring systems. Finally, to ensure the safe transportation of passengers and shippers on our nation's waterways, nuclear waste shipments may not be made via the inland waterways or on the Great Lakes unless waived for national or homeland security purposes.

This is critical to adequately protect these important natural resources.

Once the infrastructure is established and the routing determined, employees must be certified to handle any such emergencies that may result from this transportation and to mitigate their impact on local populations. My bill amends certification requirements for hazmat employees, requiring that certification be renewed every three years. Currently, this certification, without renewals, is required by regulation but not codified in statute.

The bill directs hazmat employers to submit training programs to DOT for review and approval and expands the definition of covered employees to include those who may be among the first responders to an accident but who do not receive training under current regulations. To provide funding for this additional training, the bill reauthorizes the training grant program for hazmat instructors who train hazmat employees, and enables it to cover hazmat employee training as well. Appropriations are authorized at $3,000,000 for fiscal year 2003 and for such sums as necessary for fiscal years 2004–2012.

The maximum civil penalties for violating hazmat laws regarding radioactive materials are increased from $25,000 to $100,000.

As a means of involving the public in these decisions affecting safety and security, the bill establishes a public outreach program to protect public health and safety. The program will be developed by FEMA in coordination with other agencies. In addition, the bill requires the EPA and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to conduct a study and report to Congress regarding the effects on public health of routine transportation of nuclear waste and accidents involving its transportation. The report is due one year after the date of enactment.

Especially important to my legislation is the establishment of requirements for casks. Also known as packages, these casks contain the spent nuclear fuel that is being shipped. The bill requires the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which has authority over the casks, to execute a comprehensive testing program in conjunction with DOT and DHS, and requires them to conduct a survey of potential terrorist and other threats that may be posed to casks. The NRC and DOT must jointly certify the safety of the casks, which must be designed to handle head-on collisions at any speed at which they will be transported, attempted puncture by armor-piercing ammunition, falls of the maximum distance to which the package could fall on likely routes, submersion in water to the maximum depth to which the package could be submerged, continuous exposure to the maximum temperature to which the package is likely to be subjected in an event involving fire, and other threats that may be identified. The agencies involved in this effort must report to Congress every two years on these activities.

Finally, the bill amends current statute to exclude DOT and NRC contractors from participating on the Nuclear Waste Technical Review Board and enables the Board to review the activities of the DOT and NRC and to obtain documents from them as part of its existing investigative powers. This provision will prevent any conflicts of interest between the reviewers and implementers of this law. The Board's termination date is extended from one year after nuclear waste begins to be deposited at a national repository to 10 years after such waste begins to be deposited.

I believe that our legislation alleviates many of the concerns of shippers, hazmat employees, the federal government, and affected citizens regarding the transportation of nuclear spent fuel across our Nation. In the course of its development, we consulted with shippers, railroads, labor unions, the nuclear industry, federal regulators, the environmental community, and our colleagues in the Senate. The bill seeks to address the real threats we face and to take economic and safety concerns into account, with the primary goal of increasing the safety and security of these materials during their transportation to Yucca Mountain. I appreciate the assistance that these groups have provided. I remain open to their further input and look forward to working with them to enact this critical legislation.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues, Senator DURBIN, Senator EDWARDS and Senator CLELAND in introducing the Nuclear Waste Transportation Security Act.

Ensuring the safe and secure transportation of our high-level nuclear waste across this country is of paramount importance. The greatest concern I had voting for the Yucca Mountain Resolution was the safe transportation of our waste to Yucca.

This piece of legislation is the first step in what I see as Congress' ongoing duty to oversee and evaluate our Nation's transport of nuclear waste.

Specifically, this bill directs the Department of Transportation to develop and carry out a comprehensive safety program that considers, among other things, terrorist threats.

State and Federal cooperation is required. States must be consulted by DOT in making routing decisions and notified when shipments are traveling through their State.

Dedicated trains, armed escorts and state of the art communication systems must be employed.

Full-scale testing of casks to withstand the maximum temperature, water depth and piercing likely to be encountered must also be carried out.

The EPA and CDC must conduct a study and report to Congress on the effects, if any, on public health of routine transportation of nuclear waste and accidents involving the transportation of nuclear waste.

And, the Federal Emergency Management Agency must administer a public outreach program on nuclear waste to educate the public on appropriate means of responding to an accident or attack involving high-level nuclear waste.

Employing the expertise of the DOT, NRC, FEMA, EPA and CDC to protect the American people from any potential danger posed by nuclear waste transport is the aim and goal of this legislation and I hope my colleagues will support it.

The first shipments of nuclear waste to Yucca Mountain will not take place until 2010. We need to use the time between now and then to ensure that the transportation system that will carry this waste is a safe as it can possibly be.

S. 3167. A bill to provide grants to States and outlying areas to encourage the States and outlying areas to enhance existing or establish new statewide coalitions among institutions of higher education, communities around the institutions, and other relevant organization or groups, including antidrug or anti-alcohol coalitions, to reduce underage drinking and illicit drug-use by students, both on and off campus; to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I join several of my colleagues today to introduce a series of bills related to the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, HEA. These five bills emphasize a number of issues that are vital to higher education, including teacher quality; loan forgiveness for social workers, family lawyers, and early childhood teachers; and the reduction of drug use and underage drinking at our colleges and universities.

The quality of a student's education is the direct result of the quality of that student's teachers. If we don't have well trained teachers, then future generations of our children will not be well educated. That is why I am introducing a bill that would provide $200 million in grants to our schools of education to partner with local schools to ensure that our teachers are receiving the best, most, extensive training available before they enter the classroom.

The Secretary of Education's annual report on teacher quality reported that a majority of graduates of schools of education believe that the traditional teacher preparation program left them ill prepared for the challenges and rigors of the classroom. Part of the responsibility for this lies in the hands of our schools of education. However, Congress also has a responsibility to give our schools of education the tools they need to make necessary improvements. This new bill would create a competitive grant program for schools of education, which partner with low income schools to create clinical programs to train teachers. Additionally, it would require schools of education to make internal changes by working with other departments at the university to ensure that teachers are receiving the highest quality education in core academic subjects. Finally, it would require the college or university to demonstrate a commitment to improving their schools of education by providing matching funds.

Another complex issue affecting the teaching force is the high percentage of disillusioned beginning teachers who leave the field. Our bill would help combat this issue, as well. Schools of education receiving these grants would be responsible for following their graduates and continuing to provide assistance after they enter the classroom. The more we invest in the education of teachcers especially once they have entered the profession the more likely they will remain in the classroom.

Today, I also would like to reintroduce the Early Care and Education Loan Forgiveness Act that Senator Wellstone and I had included in the last higher education reauthorization bill. We had been working on this legislation together before Paul's tragic death. I know he cared deeply about this issue and about making sure that all children receive a quality education. He was passionate about that. And, in his memory, I would like to rename our bill the "Paul Wellstone Early Educator Loan Forgiveness Act."

This bill would expand the loan forgiveness program so that it benefits not just childcare workers, but also early childhood educators. This loan forgiveness program would serve as an incentive to keep those educators in the field for longer periods of time.

Paul Wellstone knew how important early learning programs are in preparing our children for kindergarten and beyond. Research shows that children who attend quality early childcare programs when they were three or four years old scored better on math, language arts, and social skills in early elementary school than children who attended poor quality childcare programs. In short, children in early learning programs with high quality teachers, teachers with a bachelor's degree or an associate's degree or higher, do substantially better.

When we examine the number and recent growth of pre-primary education programs, it becomes difficult to differentiate between early education and childcare settings because they are so often intertwined, especially considering that 11.9 million children younger than age five spend part of their time with a care provider other than a parent and demand for quality childcare and education is growing as more mothers enter the workforce.

Because the bill targets loan forgiveness to those educators working in low-income schools or childcare settings, we can make significant strides toward providing high quality education for all of our young children, regardless of socioeconomic status. The bill would serve a two-fold function. First, it would reward professionals for their training. Second, it would encourage professionals to remain in the profession over longer periods of time, since more time in the profession leads to higher percentages of loans forgiveness. The bill would result in more educated individuals with more teaching experience and lower turnover rates, each of which enhances student performance.

I encourage my colleagues to join me in this effort to ensure that truly no children, especially our youngest children, are left behind.

I also am working on two bills with my friend and colleagues from West Virginia, Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER. These bills would provide loan forgiveness to students who dedicate their careers to working in the realm of child welfare, including social workers, who work for child protective services, and family law experts.

Currently, there aren't enough social workers to fill available jobs in child welfare today. Furthermore, the number of social work job openings is expected to increase faster than the average for all occupations through 2010. The need for highly qualified social workers in the child protective services is reaching crisis level.

We also need more qualified individuals focusing on family law. The wonderful thing about family law is its focus on rehabilitation, that is the rehabilitation of families by helping them through life's transitions, whether it is a family going through a divorce, a family dealing with their troubled teenager in the juvenile system, or a child getting adopted and becoming a member of a new family.

Across the United States, family, juvenile, and domestic relations courts are experiencing a shortage of qualified attorneys. As many of my colleagues and I know, law school is an expensive investment. In the last 20 years, tuition has increased more than 200 percent. Currently, the average rate of law school debt is about $80,000 per graduate. To be sure, few law school graduates can afford to work in the public sector because debts prevent even the most dedicated public service lawyer from being able to take these low-paying jobs. This results in a shortage of family lawyers.

The shortage of family law attorneys also disproportionately impacts juveniles. The lack of available representation causes children to spend more time in foster care because cases are adjourned or postponed when they simply cannot find an attorney to represent their rights or those of the parent or guardian. Furthermore, the number of children involved in the court system is sharply increasing. We need to make sure the interests of these children are taken care of by making sure they have an advocate, someone working solely on their behalf.

By offering loan forgiveness to those willing to purpose careers in the child welfare field, we can increase the number of highly qualified and dedicate individuals who work in the realm of child welfare and family law.

Finally, I am introducing a bill today with my friend and colleague from Connecticut, Senator LIEBERMAN, that would help address an epidemic, the epidemic of underage drinking, binge drinking, and drug-related problems on college and university campuses across the United States. Our bill would provide grants to states to establish statewide partnerships among colleges and universities and the surrounding communities to work together to reduce underage and binge drinking and illicit drug use by students.

According to a study by Boston University, over 1,400 students aged 18–24 died in 1998 from alcohol-related injuries, more than 600,000 students were assaulted by another student, and another 500,000 were unintentionally injured while under the influence of alcohol. According to a 1999 Harvard University study, 40 percent of college students are binge drinkers and according to the Department of Health and Human Services, nearly 10.5 million current drinkers were under the legal age of 21, and of these, over 5 million were binge drinkers.

Currently, 28 States, including my home State of Ohio, have coalitions that deal specifically with the culture of alcohol and drug abuse on our Nation's college campuses. They work with the surrounding communities, including local residents, bar, restaurant and shop owners, and law enforcement officials, toward a goal of changing the pervasive culture of drug and alcohol abuse. They provide alternative alcohol-free events, as well as support groups for those who choose not to drink. They also educate students about the dangers of alcohol and drug-use.

Furthermore, the coalitions recognize that while it is important to promote an alcohol aware and drug-free campus community, if the community surrounding the campus does not promote these initiatives, there will be no long-term solutions. Therefore, these coalitions also have worked to establish regulations both on and off campus, which will help our nation's youth to stay healthy, alive, and get the most out of their time at college. Some of these regulations include the registration of kegs. This provides accountability for both the store and the student. This is just an example of one step that colleges, local communities, and organizations can take.

To help start the expansion of these coalitions, our bill would provide $50 million dollars in grants. This is an important demonstration project that would help lead to positive effects for our young people. It is up to us to change the culture, which has been perpetuated by years of complacency and a dismissal tone of "that's just the way it is in college." We must protect the health and education of our young people by changing this culture of abuse—and that is exactly what this bill would do.

Next year when we consider the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act, I encourage my colleagues to join in support of these initiatives.

By Mr. DODD:

S. 3168. A bill to improve funeral home, cemetery, and crematory inspections systems to establish consumer protections relating to funeral service contracts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Federal Death Care Inspection and Disclosure Act of 2002, a bill which I believe will go a long way in restoring the trust that Americans place in the funeral and death care industries.

None of us like to think about death and dying. It is a painful and uncomfortable subject, and most Americans, understandably, choose not to confront matters related to the death of a loved one until the death actually occurs. And when a loved one does pass on, we turn to our friends and family to grieve. Certainly, the last thing anyone wants to do at such a painful time is to spend hours or days negotiating or shopping for a funeral, casket, or other goods and services. Instead, we leave most of these arrangements in the hands of funeral service providers, turning to them to ensure that our loved ones are cared for and treated with respect and dignity after their passing.

We place a great deal of trust in funeral service providers. A funeral, after all, represents one of the largest purchases many consumers will ever make, just behind a home, college education, and a car. However, unlike these transactions, the purchase of funeral services is most often done under intense emotional duress, with very little time to spare, and without the benefit of the type of consumer information generally available when making such a large purchase. As a result, we trust funeral service providers to give us fair prices, to represent goods and services accurately, and to not take advantage of us during our moments of greatest grief and vulnerability.

For the most part, this trust is well deserved. I have no doubt, that the majority of individuals working in the funeral industry are good men and women who practice their profession with the honor and gravity it demands. However, recent revelations of abuses in the industry have shown us that not all members of the death care industry are honest and upstanding. We all remember hearing, earlier this year of the discovery of over 200 bodies strewn in the woods near a crematorium in Noble, GA. There is also recent evidence of desecration of graves and remains at cemeteries in Florida, California, Hawaii, and my own State of Connecticut. These incidents, as well as developments in the funeral industry as a whole, compel us to reexamine the regulatory structure we currently have in place for this industry.

Currently, the death care industry is regulated by a patchwork of State and local laws. These regulations may have been sufficient years ago, but the character of the industry has changed substantially since many of these laws were passed. The industry has become surprisingly large and diverse. Today, the death care industry generates annual revenues of over $15 billion and employ over 104,000 Americans. The 1990s saw the rise of multi-state "consolidators" who purchased local funeral homes across the country. Even for small local firms, the business has become increasingly complex. As more and more Americans travel and live in places far from where they were born, the industry has become one that frequently does business across State and county lines.

There have also been changes in Americans' cultural expectations of funeral services. For example, the percentage of cremations has risen from 5 percent in the 1970s to 25 percent today. However, only 12 States have substantive laws which cover cremation. In fact, in the case in Georgia I mentioned earlier, the crematorium in question was statutorily exempt from inspection, allowing the abuses to continue undiscovered.

The only significant Federal regulation of the industry exists in the Federal Trade Commission's Funeral Rule, promulgated nearly 20 years ago. Again, this rule has not kept up with the nature of the industry. Perhaps most importantly, the rule does not cover numerous sectors of the industry such as cemeteries, crematories, and casket makers. It also does not effectively regulate prepaid funeral contracts, which have become an increasingly popular option in recent years.

Earlier this year, I chaired a hearing of the Subcommittee on Children and Families in which we examined developments in the industry and how they have impacted American families. Since that hearing, I have worked with both consumer and industry groups to craft legislation to protect Americans from potential abuse by funeral service providers. The Federal Death Care Inspection and Disclosure Act of 2002 would provide Federal funding to allow States to hire and train inspectors and give consumers the right to legal action against those who violate regulatory standards. In order to be eligible for funding, states would have to adhere to standards which are outlined in the legislation. The act would also codify and strengthen the existing FTC regulations governing licensing and registration, recordkeeping, inspection, resolution of consumer complaints, and enforcement of State laws in the industry. It would clarify regulations to prevent deceptive trade practices in the industry and ensure that consumers can make informed decisions as they make funeral arrangements. Finally, the FTC rules would be expanded to cover all segments of the death care industry.

I am aware that as we are in the closing days of this Congress, the Senate will not have the opportunity to consider this legislation this year. However, I would like to take this opportunity to raise this issue with colleagues today in the hope that we will be able to move on this issue when we reconvene for the 108th Congress. This legislation is bipartisan. A House companion bill is being sponsored by Representative FOLEY of Florida. He has been a leader in the effort to ensure that dignity and respect prevail in all aspects of death care services. I look forward to working with him and all of our colleagues in the 108th Congress to advance this same worthy objective.

By Ms. LANDRIEU:

S. 3169. A bill to provide for military charters between military installations and local school districts, to provide credit enhancement initiatives to promote military charter school facility acquisition, construction, and renovation, and for other purposed; to the committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions.

Ms. LANDRIEU. Mr. President, I rise to offer a bill which addresses a growing population who seek a distinct supportive voice: our military dependent children.

Education is an issue which many Senators on both sides of the aisle have worked very hard to improve in every State in our union. This bill, however, is unique in that it strives to increase the quality of education for hundreds of thousands of our children of members of the Armed Services by catering to their specific needs and frequent moves.

Let me begin by expressing my thanks to most members of this body for always working diligently to introduce and pass great initiatives for education. I firmly believe that we, at this juncture in our Nation's great history, have continued to bring family issues, such as education and the economy to the forefront of our discussion. Further, amid our continued discussion of the possibility of sending our military men and women into harm's way in Iraq, there is no better time to concentrate on their children, children who have the added burden of worrying about a deployed parent, or who must move to a new school many times as their parent or parents move to new assignments around the country.

This bill, I am proposing, will provide Stable Transitions I Education for our Active Duty Youth. It is called the STEADY Act and is the first step to a smoother educational career for military dependent children.

When I last spoke of this bill, I said that we in "Congress are becoming wiser and wiser on the issue of education" by recognizing that our future and our economy depend on the education of our children.

It truly is an issue of strengthening our Nation. We cannot have an economically strong and militarily secure Nation moving in a progressive way without an excellent school system. No matter where a child is born, rural or urban, on the east coast or west coast, if we do not do a better job as a Nation of giving our children a quality education, the future of our Nation will not be as bright, and it could put us in jeopardy.

I also make the argument that for our military, the same holds true. It is not just about providing our military with the most extraordinary weapons. It is not just about training our military men and women tot he highest levels. It is not just providing them the basics.

We have an obligation to recognize that when our men and women sign up to be in our military, they have willingly made sacrifices, but their families' quality of life should not be one of those sacrifices. We need to provide them, between the Department of Defense and the Department of Education, a quality education for their children.

When we send our soldiers into battle, we want them focused on the battle and mission at hand. We do not want them worried, as they naturally would be, about spouses and dependents at home, about their happiness, about their comfort, about their security. It makes our military stronger when we provide good, quality-of-life initiatives for their families at home. One of the ways we can do that is by improving the schools for military dependents. There are over 800,000 children who are military dependents out of an overall force strength of 1.4 million adults connected to the military. Many of them are school-age children. Because of the specific demands of our military, which are very unlike the civilian sector, many move every 2 years. Some military members move from the east coast to the west coast, moving families with them. It is very difficult providing an excellent education generally, and yet the military has even more challenges.

What is the solution? I offer this bill to strengthen our military schools in the United States in a creative way. This bill will set up the a pilot program to help create military charter schools around the Nation in partnership with local public school systems to provide an opportunity not only for our military dependents, but this framework will also help communities who have a large military presence. The benefit overall is that the community gets a better school, a school that has the opportunity to provide an excellent education, while being extremely flexible to accommodate the unique needs of a military dependent student.

The second benefit is that it gives children whose families might not have any connection to the military, an introduction into who military people and what military life can be like.

This is a partnership. It is a pilot program that will help establish charter schools, will give important consideration to military children as they move from community to community, and will create for the first time what we call an academic passport.

An academic passport will help to stabilize and standardize the curriculum without micromanaging, without dictating what the curriculum should be. It sets up a new approach or a new framework for our local elementary and secondary schools throughout the country to set up a standardized curriculum to address the vast peaks and valleys encountered by military dependent students as they move from one district to another. To illustrate: one school district might require 3 years of a foreign language or 2 years of algebra or 1 year of algebra, or a whole different curriculum. That is part of this bill. It is something about which military families feel very strongly. I hope that with this new pilot program to help create charter schools with a new academic passport, we can begin to focus some of our resources, again, not all within the Department of Defense; some of this is within the jurisdiction of the Department of Education, to create something exciting and wonderful for these 800,000 children.

Madam President, 600,000 of these children are in public schools today, at great stress to those public districts; 100,000 of these children are either in private schools or are home schooled; and only 32,000 of the 800,000 are in Department of Defense schools. These schools are concentrated in a few States. There are only 32,000 children, as I said, of 800,000 dependents in DDESS schools in New York, Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama.

As my colleagues can see, dependent children of military personnel are in public schools throughout the country. Sometimes they are good public schools; sometimes they are not so good. We are working hard to make every public school excellent, but I think we have a special obligation to our military families to make sure that those children, with the added burdens they face, are getting an excellent education.

If you look at the general population, non-officers in our military, 91.5 percent have a high school degree or GED, 91 percent. In our general population, it is about 80 percent. This is a very upwardly mobile group of Americans. Theses are men and women with great discipline, great patriotism, great commitment to the Nation. Obviously, they are serving their country, but they are committed to their families, their communities, and their education.

As one can see, the officers exceed the general population at large. Almost 40 percent have advanced degrees; 99 percent or more have bachelor degrees. This is also a very upwardly mobile population. If we can provide excellent schools and opportunities for the children of this 91 percent, I think we will be doing a very good job in helping to strengthen our military but also helping our country be a better place. It is truly something on which we should focus more.

In conclusion, let me tell you of a school of which I am very proud. It might be one of the first military charters, if not the first, in the Nation. This is a school which opened in September and is an even larger success than we anticipated. This is a state-of-the-art, brand new charter school in Plaquemines Parish, which serves the military and civilian community there. It has alleviated a huge burden on the local school district, and is ready for its first expansion.

I think we can work all day long on pay raises, on building more ships, on buying more tanks, and on building a stronger Air Force, but truly I think focusing on educational opportunities for military dependent children, will help us build morale, help us improve retention, will help us strengthen our military in the intermediate and the long term, and it is something that, with a little creativity, a little bit of thinking outside of the box, I am convinced we could finance the construction of these schools through means laid out in the bill, and end up coming out with some excellent facilities around this Nation to serve both our military and our nonmilitary families and do a great job for our Defense Department and a great job for our country. That is what this bill would accomplish: again, it sets up a pilot program to establish military charter schools in the neediest areas of the Nation. I would hope that it would be met with enthusiasm from my colleagues who consistently support good education initiatives, and from all of us who know the value of military service to our great Nation.

"Every few years you make new friends, Then you're gone. You do it all the time. I keep in touch. My best friend and I email, and write back and forth."—Military dependent student.

Subtitle E—Chemical Security

SEC. 241. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Chemical Security Act of 2002".

SEC. 242. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the chemical industry is a crucial part of the critical infrastructure of the United States—

(A) in its own right; and

(B) because that industry supplies resources essential to the functioning of other critical infrastructures;

(2) the possibility of terrorist and criminal attacks on chemical sources (such as industrial facilities) poses a serious threat to public health, safety, and welfare, critical infrastructure, national security, and the environment;

(3) the possibility of theft of dangerous chemicals from chemical sources for use in terrorist attacks poses a further threat to public health, safety, and welfare, critical infrastructure, national security, and the environment; and

(4) there are significant opportunities to prevent theft from, and criminal attack on, chemical sources and reduce the harm that such acts would produce by—

(A)(i) reducing usage and storage of chemicals by changing production methods and processes; and

(ii) employing inherently safer technologies in the manufacture, transport, and use of chemicals;

(B) enhancing secondary containment and other existing mitigation measures; and

(C) improving security.

On page 451, strike line 17 and all that follows through page 452, line 12, and insert the following:

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE AND PUBLICATION OF REORGANIZATION PLANS.—

(1) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as provided under paragraph (3), a reorganization plan shall be effective upon approval by the President of a resolution (as defined in subsection (g)) with respect to such plan, only if such resolution is passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate, within the first period of 90 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date on which the plan is transmitted to Congress.

(2) SESSION OF CONGRESS.—For the purpose of this section—

(A) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of Congress sine die; and

(B) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain are excluded in the computation of any period of time in which Congress is in continuous session.

(3) LATER EFFECTIVE DATE.—Under provisions contained in a reorganization plan, any provision thereof may be effective at a time later than the date on which the plan otherwise is effective.

(4) PUBLICATION OF PLAN.—A reorganization plan which is effective shall be printed—

(A) in the Statutes at Large in the same volume as the public laws; and

(B) in the Federal Register.

(e) EFFECT ON OTHER LAWS; PENDING LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.—

(1) EFFECT ON LAWS.—

(A) DEFINITION.—In this paragraph, the term "regulation or other action" means a regulation, rule, order, policy, determination, directive, authorization, permit, privilege, requirement, designation, or other action.

(B) EFFECT.—A statute enacted, and a regulation or other action made, prescribed, issued, granted, or performed in respect of or by an agency or function affected by a reorganization under this section, before the effective date of the reorganization, has, except to the extent rescinded, modified, superseded, or made inapplicable by or under authority of law or by the abolition of a function, the same effect as if the reorganization had not been made. However, if the statute, regulation, or other action has vested the functions in the agency from which it is removed under the reorganization plan, the function, insofar as it is to be exercised after the plan becomes effective, shall be deemed as vested in the agency under which the function is placed in the plan.

(2) PENDING LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.—A suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of an agency or other officer of the United States, in the officer's official capacity or in relation to the discharge of the officer's official duties, does not abate by reason of the taking effect of a reorganization plan under this section. On motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after the reorganization plan takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, the court may allow the suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained by or against the successor of the head or officer under the reorganization effected by the plan or, if there is no successor, against such agency or officer as the President designates.

(f) RULES OF SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON REORGANIZATION PLANS.—Subsections (g) through (j) are enacted by Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they are deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of resolutions with respect to any reorganization plans transmitted to Congress (in accordance with subsection (a)); and they supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with the full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as relating to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

(g) TERMS OF RESOLUTION.—For the purposes of subsections (f) through (j), "resolution" means only a joint resolution of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That Congress approves the reorganization plan transmitted to Congress by the President on ____________, 20___.", and includes such modifications and revisions as are submitted by the President under subsection (c). The blank spaces therein are to be filled appropriately. The term does not include a resolution which specifies more than 1 reorganization plan.

(h) INTRODUCTION AND REFERENCE OF RESOLUTION.—

(1) INTRODUCTION.—No later than the first day of session following the day on which a reorganization plan is transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate under subsection (a), a resolution, as defined in subsection (g), shall be—

(A) introduced (by request) in the House by the chairman of the Government Reform Committee of the House, or by a Member or Members of the House designated by such chairman; and

(B) introduced (by request) in the Senate by the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee of the Senate, or by a Member or Members of the Senate designated by such chairman.

(2) REFERRAL.—A resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Reform of the House (and all resolutions with respect to the same plan shall be referred to the same committee) by the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as the case may be. The committee shall make its recommendations to the House of Representatives or the Senate, respectively, within 75 calendar days of continuous session of Congress following the date of such resolution's introduction.

(i) DISCHARGE OF COMMITTEE CONSIDERING RESOLUTION.—If the committee to which is referred a resolution introduced pursuant to subsection (h)(1) has not reported such a resolution or identical resolution at the end of 75 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after its introduction, such committee shall be deemed to be discharged from further consideration of such resolution and such resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar of the House involved.

(j) PROCEDURE AFTER REPORT OR DISCHARGE OF COMMITTEES; DEBATE; VOTE ON FINAL PASSAGE.—

(1) PROCEDURE.—When the committee has reported, or has been deemed to be discharged (under subsection (i)) from further consideration of, a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) for any Member of the respective House to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. The motion shall not be subject to amendment, or to any motion to postpone, or a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is agreed to, the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the respective House until disposed of.

(2) DEBATE.—Debate on the resolution, and on all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between individuals favoring and individuals opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate is in order and not debatable. An amendment to, or a motion to recommit the resolution is not in order. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is passed or rejected shall not be in order.

(3) VOTE ON FINAL PASSAGE.—Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on the resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, and a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the appropriate House, the vote on final passage of the resolution shall occur.

(4) APPEALS.—Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be decided without debate.

(5) PRIOR PASSAGE.—If, prior to the passage by 1 House of a resolution of that House, that House receives a resolution with respect to the same reorganization plan from the other House, then—

(A) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no resolution had been received from the other House; but

(B) the vote on final passage shall be on the resolution of the other House.

(3) Subtitle G of title VIII.

(4) Section 871.

SA 4954. Mr. REID (for Ms. CANTWELL (for herself, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. ENZI, and Mr. KOHL)) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1742, to prevent the crime of identity theft, mitigate the harm to individuals victimized by identity theft, and for other purposes; as follows:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Identity Theft Victims Assistance Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds that—

(1) the crime of identity theft is the fastest growing crime in the United States;

(2) victims of identity theft often have extraordinary difficulty restoring their credit and regaining control of their identity because of the viral nature of identity theft;

(3) identity theft may be ruinous to the good name and credit of consumers whose identities are misappropriated, and victims of identity theft may be denied otherwise well-deserved credit, may have to spend enormous time, effort, and sums of money to remedy their circumstances, and may suffer extreme emotional distress including deep depression founded in profound frustration as they address the array of problems that may arise as a result of identity theft;

(4) victims are often required to contact numerous Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, consumer credit reporting agencies, and creditors over many years, as each event of fraud arises;

(5) the Government, business entities, and credit reporting agencies have a shared responsibility to assist identity theft victims, to mitigate the harm that results from fraud perpetrated in the victim's name;

(6) victims of identity theft need a nationally standardized means of—

(A) reporting identity theft to consumer credit reporting agencies and business entities; and

(B) evidencing their true identity and claim of identity theft to consumer credit reporting agencies and business entities;

(7) one of the greatest law enforcement challenges posed by identity theft is that stolen identities are often used to perpetrate crimes in many different localities in different States, and although identity theft is a Federal crime, most often, State and local law enforcement agencies are responsible for investigating and prosecuting the crimes; and

(8) the Federal Government should assist State and local law enforcement agencies to effectively combat identity theft and the associated fraud.

SEC. 3. TREATMENT OF IDENTITY THEFT MITIGATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 47 title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 1028 the following:

"§ 1028A. Treatment of identity theft mitigation

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'business entity' means any corporation, trust, partnership, sole proprietorship, or unincorporated association, including any financial service provider, financial information repository, creditor (as that term is defined in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act (15 U.S.C. 1602)), telecommunications, utilities, or other service provider;

"(2) the term 'consumer' means an individual;

"(3) the term 'financial information' means information identifiable as relating to an individual consumer that concerns the amount and conditions of the assets, liabilities, or credit of the consumer, including—

"(b) INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO VICTIMS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A business entity that possesses information relating to an alleged identity theft, or that has entered into a transaction, provided credit, products, goods, or services, accepted payment, or otherwise done business with a person that has made unauthorized use of the means of identification of the victim, shall, not later than 20 days after the receipt of a written request by the victim, meeting the requirements of subsection (c), provide, without charge, a copy of all application and transaction information related to the transaction being alleged as an identity theft to—

"(A) the victim;

"(B) any Federal, State, or local governing law enforcement agency or officer specified by the victim; or

"(C) any law enforcement agency investigating the identity theft and authorized by the victim to take receipt of records provided under this section.

"(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No provision of Federal or State law prohibiting the disclosure of financial information by a business entity to third parties shall be used to deny disclosure of information to the victim under this section.

"(B) LIMITATION.—Except as provided in subparagraph (A), nothing in this section requires a business entity to disclose information that the business entity is otherwise prohibited from disclosing under any other provision of Federal or State law.

"(c) VERIFICATION OF IDENTITY AND CLAIM.—Unless a business entity, at its discretion, is otherwise able to verify the identity of a victim making a request under subsection (b)(1), the victim shall provide to the business entity—

"(1) as proof of positive identification—

"(B) if providing proof by mail, a copy of a government-issued identification card; or

"(2) as proof of a claim of identity theft, at the election of the business entity—

"(A) a copy of a police report evidencing the claim of the victim of identity theft;

"(B) a copy of a standardized affidavit of identity theft developed and made available by the Federal Trade Commission; or

"(C) any affidavit of fact that is acceptable to the business entity for that purpose.

"(d) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—No business entity may be held liable for a disclosure, made in good faith and reasonable judgment, to provide information under this section with respect to an individual in connection with an identity theft to other business entities, law enforcement authorities, victims, or any person alleging to be a victim, if—

"(1) the business entity complies with subsection (c); and

"(2) such disclosure was made—

"(A) for the purpose of detection, investigation, or prosecution of identity theft; or

"(B) to assist a victim in recovery of fines, restitution, rehabilitation of the credit of the victim, or such other relief as may be appropriate.

"(e) AUTHORITY TO DECLINE TO PROVIDE INFORMATION.—A business entity may decline to provide information under subsection (b) if, in the exercise of good faith and reasonable judgment, the business entity believes that—

"(1) this section does not require disclosure of the information; or

"(2) the request for the information is based on a misrepresentation of fact by the victim relevant to the request for information.

"(f) NO NEW RECORDKEEPING OBLIGATION.—Nothing in this section creates an obligation on the part of a business entity to obtain, retain, or maintain information or records that are not otherwise required to be obtained, retained, or maintained in the ordinary course of its business or under other applicable law.

"(g) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—In any civil action brought to enforce this section, it is an affirmative defense (which the defendant must establish by a preponderance of the evidence) for a business entity to file an affidavit or answer stating that—

"(1) the business entity has made a reasonably diligent search of its available business records; and

"(2) the records requested under this section do not exist or are not available.

"(h) NO PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to provide a private right of action or claim for relief.

"(i) ENFORCEMENT.—

"(1) CIVIL ACTIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In any case in which the attorney general of a State has reason to believe that an interest of the residents of that State has been, or is threatened to be, adversely affected by a violation of this section by any business entity, the State, as parens patriae, may bring a civil action on behalf of the residents of the State in a district court of the United States of appropriate jurisdiction to—

"(i) enjoin that practice;

"(ii) enforce compliance of this section;

"(iii) obtain damages—

"(II) punitive damages, if the violation is willful or intentional; and

"(iv) obtain such other equitable relief as the court may consider to be appropriate.

"(2) INTERVENTION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—On receiving notice of an action under paragraph (1)(B), the Attorney General of the United States shall have the right to intervene in that action.

"(B) EFFECT OF INTERVENTION.—If the Attorney General of the United States intervenes in an action under this subsection, the Attorney General shall have the right to be heard with respect to any matter that arises in that action.

"(C) SERVICE OF PROCESS.—Upon request of the Attorney General of the United States, the attorney general of a State that has filed an action under this subsection shall, pursuant to Rule 4(d)(4) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, serve the Government with—

"(i) a copy of the complaint; and

"(ii) written disclosure of substantially all material evidence and information in the possession of the attorney general of the State.

"(3) CONSTRUCTION.—For purposes of bringing any civil action under this subsection, nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent an attorney general of a State from exercising the powers conferred on such attorney general by the laws of that State—

"(A) to conduct investigations;

"(B) to administer oaths or affirmations; or

"(C) to compel the attendance of witnesses or the production of documentary and other evidence.

"(4) ACTIONS BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES.—In any case in which an action is instituted by or on behalf of the Attorney General of the United States for a violation of this section, no State may, during the pendency of that action, institute an action under this subsection against any defendant named in the complaint in that action for violation of that practice.

"(i) resides;

"(ii) is doing business; or

"(iii) may be found.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 47 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1028 the following new item:

"1028A. Treatment of identity theft mitigation.".

SEC. 4. AMENDMENTS TO THE FAIR CREDIT REPORTING ACT.

"(e) BLOCK OF INFORMATION RESULTING FROM IDENTITY THEFT.—

"(1) BLOCK.—Except as provided in paragraph (3) and not later than 30 days after the date of receipt of proof of the identity of a consumer and an official copy of a police report evidencing the claim of the consumer of identity theft, a consumer reporting agency shall block the reporting of any information identified by the consumer in the file of the consumer resulting from the identity theft, so that the information cannot be reported.

"(2) NOTIFICATION.—A consumer reporting agency shall promptly notify the furnisher of information identified by the consumer under paragraph (1)—

"(A) that the information may be a result of identity theft;

"(B) that a police report has been filed;

"(C) that a block has been requested under this subsection; and

"(D) of the effective date of the block.

"(3) AUTHORITY TO DECLINE OR RESCIND.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A consumer reporting agency may decline to block, or may rescind any block, of consumer information under this subsection if—

"(i) in the exercise of good faith and reasonable judgment, the consumer reporting agency finds that—

"(I) the information was blocked due to a misrepresentation of fact by the consumer relevant to the request to block; or

"(II) the consumer knowingly obtained possession of goods, services, or moneys as a result of the blocked transaction or transactions, or the consumer should have known that the consumer obtained possession of goods, services, or moneys as a result of the blocked transaction or transactions; or

"(ii) the consumer agrees that the blocked information or portions of the blocked information were blocked in error.

"(B) NOTIFICATION TO CONSUMER.—If the block of information is declined or rescinded under this paragraph, the affected consumer shall be notified promptly, in the same manner as consumers are notified of the reinsertion of information under subsection (a)(5)(B).

"(C) SIGNIFICANCE OF BLOCK.—For purposes of this paragraph, if a consumer reporting agency rescinds a block, the presence of information in the file of a consumer prior to the blocking of such information is not evidence of whether the consumer knew or should have known that the consumer obtained possession of any goods, services, or monies as a result of the block.

"(4) EXCEPTIONS.—

"(A) NEGATIVE INFORMATION DATA.—A consumer reporting agency shall not be required to comply with this subsection when such agency is issuing information for authorizations, for the purpose of approving or processing negotiable instruments, electronic funds transfers, or similar methods of payment, based solely on negative information, including—

"(i) dishonored checks;

"(ii) accounts closed for cause;

"(iii) substantial overdrafts;

"(iv) abuse of automated teller machines; or

"(v) other information which indicates a risk of fraud occurring.

"(B) RESELLERS.—

"(i) NO RESELLER FILE.—The provisions of this subsection do not apply to a consumer reporting agency if the consumer reporting agency—

"(I) does not maintain a file on the consumer from which consumer reports are produced;

"(II) is not, at the time of the request of the consumer under paragraph (1), otherwise furnishing or reselling a consumer report concerning the information identified by the consumer; and

"(ii) RESELLER WITH FILE.—The sole obligation of the consumer reporting agency under this subsection, with regard to any request of a consumer under this subsection, shall be to block the consumer report maintained by the consumer reporting agency from any subsequent use if—

"(I) the consumer, in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (1), identifies, to a consumer reporting agency, information in the file of the consumer that resulted from identity theft;

"(II) the consumer reporting agency is acting as a reseller of the identified information by assembling or merging information about that consumer which is contained in the database of not less than 1 other consumer reporting agency; and

"(III) the consumer reporting agency does not store or maintain a database of information obtained for resale from which new consumer reports are produced.

"(iii) NOTICE.—In carrying out its obligation under clause (ii), the consumer reporting agency shall provide a notice to the consumer of the decision to block the file. Such notice shall contain the name, address, and telephone number of each consumer reporting agency from which the consumer information was obtained for resale.".

(b) FALSE CLAIMS.—Section 1028 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(j) Any person who knowingly falsely claims to be a victim of identity theft for the purpose of obtaining the blocking of information by a consumer reporting agency under section 611(e)(1) of the Fair Credit Reporting Act (15 U.S.C. 1681i(e)(1)) shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.".

"(c) IDENTITY THEFT.—An action to enforce a liability created under this title may be brought not later than 4 years from the date of the defendant's violation if—

SA 4955. Mr. REID (for Mr. HELMS (for himself and Mr. LEAHY)) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 5469, To amend title 17, United States Code, with respect to the statutory license for webcasting; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small Webcaster Settlement Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Some small webcasters who did not participate in the copyright arbitration royalty panel proceeding leading to the July 8, 2002 order of the Librarian of Congress establishing rates and terms for certain digital performances and ephemeral reproductions of sound recordings, as provided in part 261 of the Code of Federal Regulations (published in the Federal Register on July 8, 2002) (referred to in this section as "small webcasters"), have expressed reservations about the fee structure set forth in such order, and have expressed their desire for a fee based on a percentage of revenue.

(2) Congress has strongly encouraged representatives of copyright owners of sound recordings and representatives of the small webcasters to engage in negotiations to arrive at an agreement that would include a fee based on a percentage of revenue.

(3) The representatives have arrived at an agreement that they can accept in the extraordinary and unique circumstances here presented, specifically as to the small webcasters, their belief in their inability to pay the fees due pursuant to the July 8 order, and as to the copyright owners of sound recordings and performers, the strong encouragement of Congress to reach an accommodation with the small webcasters on an expedited basis.

(4) The representatives have indicated that they do not believe the agreement provides for or in any way approximates fair or reasonable royalty rates and terms, or rates and terms that would have been negotiated in the marketplace between a willing buyer and a willing seller.

(5) Congress has made no determination as to whether the agreement provides for or in any way approximates fair or reasonable fees and terms, or rates and terms that would have been negotiated in the marketplace between a willing buyer and a willing seller.

(6) Congress likewise has made no determination as to whether the July 8 order is reasonable or arbitrary, and nothing in this Act shall be taken into account by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in its review of such order.

(7) It is, nevertheless, in the public interest for the parties to be able to enter into such an agreement without fear of liability for deviating from the fees and terms of the July 8 order, if it is clear that the agreement will not be admissible as evidence or otherwise taken into account in any government proceeding involving the setting or adjustment of the royalties payable to copyright owners of sound recordings for the public performance or reproduction in ephemeral phonorecords or copies of such works, the determination of terms or conditions related thereto, or the establishment of notice or recordkeeping requirements.

SEC. 3. SUSPENSION OF CERTAIN PAYMENTS.

(a) NONCOMMERCIAL WEBCASTERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The payments to be made by noncommercial webcasters for the digital performance of sound recordings under section 114 of title 17, United States Code, and the making of ephemeral phonorecords under section 112 of title 17, United States Code, during the period beginning on October 28, 1998, and ending on May 31, 2003, which have not already been paid, shall not be due until June 20, 2003.

(2) DEFINITION.—In this subsection, the term "noncommercial webcaster" has the meaning given that term in section 114(f)(5)(E)(i) of title 17, United States Code, as added by section 4 of this Act.

(b) SMALL COMMERCIAL WEBCASTERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The receiving agent may, in a writing signed by an authorized representative thereof, delay the obligation of any 1 or more small commercial webcasters to make payments pursuant to sections 112 and 114 of title 17, United States Code, for a period determined by such entity to allow negotiations as permitted in section 4 of this Act, except that any such period shall end no later than December 15, 2002. The duration and terms of any such delay shall be as set forth in such writing.

(2) DEFINITIONS.—In this subsection—

(A) the term "webcaster" has the meaning given that term in section 114(f)(5)(E)(iii) of title 17, United States Code, as added by section 4 of this Act; and

(B) the term "receiving agent" shall have the meaning given that term in section 261.2 of title 37, Code of Federal Regulations, as published in the Federal Register on July 8, 2002.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION FOR SETTLEMENTS.

Section 114(f) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding after paragraph (4) the following:

"(5)(A) Notwithstanding section 112(e) and the other provisions of this subsection, the receiving agent may enter into agreements for the reproduction and performance of sound recordings under section 112(e) and this section by any 1 or more small commercial webcasters or noncommercial webcasters during the period beginning on October 28, 1998, and ending on December 31, 2004, that, once published in the Federal Register pursuant to subparagraph (B), shall be binding on all copyright owners of sound recordings and other persons entitled to payment under this section, in lieu of any determination by a copyright arbitration royalty panel or decision by the Librarian of Congress. Any such agreement for small commercial webcasters shall include provisions for payment of royalties on the basis of a percentage of revenue or expenses, or both, and include a minimum fee. Any such agreement may include other terms and conditions, including requirements by which copyright owners may receive notice of the use of their sound recordings and under which records of such use shall be kept and made available by small commercial webcasters or noncommercial webcasters. The receiving agent shall be under no obligation to negotiate any such agreement. The receiving agent shall have no obligation to any copyright owner of sound recordings or any other person entitled to payment under this section in negotiating any such agreement, and no liability to any copyright owner of sound recordings or any other person entitled to payment under this section for having entered into such agreement.

"(B) The Copyright Office shall cause to be published in the Federal Register any agreement entered into pursuant to subparagraph (A). Such publication shall include a statement containing the substance of subparagraph (C). Such agreements shall not be included in the Code of Federal Regulations. Thereafter, the terms of such agreement shall be available, as an option, to any small commercial webcaster or noncommercial webcaster meeting the eligibility conditions of such agreement.

"(C) Neither subparagraph (A) nor any provisions of any agreement entered into pursuant to subparagraph (A), including any rate structure, fees, terms, conditions, or notice and recordkeeping requirements set forth therein, shall be admissible as evidence or otherwise taken into account in any administrative, judicial, or other government proceeding involving the setting or adjustment of the royalties payable for the public performance or reproduction in ephemeral phonorecords or copies of sound recordings, the determination of terms or conditions related thereto, or the establishment of notice or recordkeeping requirements by the Librarian of Congress under paragraph (4) or section 112(e)(4). It is the intent of Congress that any royalty rates, rate structure, definitions, terms, conditions, or notice and recordkeeping requirements, included in such agreements shall be considered as a compromise motivated by the unique business, economic and political circumstances of small webcasters, copyright owners, and performers rather than as matters that would have been negotiated in the marketplace between a willing buyer and a willing seller, or otherwise meet the objectives set forth in section 801(b).

"(D) Nothing in the Small Webcaster Settlement Act of 2002 or any agreement entered into pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be taken into account by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in its review of the determination by the Librarian of Congress of July 8, 2002, of rates and terms for the digital performance of sound recordings and ephemeral recordings, pursuant to sections 112 and 114.

"(E) As used in this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'noncommercial webcaster' means a webcaster that—

"(I) is exempt from taxation under section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 501);

"(II) has applied in good faith to the Internal Revenue Service for exemption from taxation under section 501 of the Internal Revenue Code and has a commercially reasonable expectation that such exemption shall be granted; or

"(III) is operated by a State or possession or any governmental entity or subordinate thereof, or by the United States or District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes;

"(ii) the term 'receiving agent' shall have the meaning given that term in section 261.2 of title 37, Code of Federal Regulations, as published in the Federal Register on July 8, 2002; and

"(iii) the term 'webcaster' means a person or entity that has obtained a compulsory license under section 112 or 114 and the implementing regulations therefor to make eligible nonsubscription transmissions and ephemeral recordings.

"(F) The authority to make settlements pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall expire December 15, 2002, except with respect to noncommercial webcasters for whom the authority shall expire May 31, 2003.".

SEC. 5. DEDUCTIBILITY OF COSTS AND EXPENSES OF AGENTS AND DIRECT PAYMENT TO ARTISTS OF ROYALTIES FOR DIGITAL PERFORMANCES OF SOUND RECORDINGS.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds that—

(1) in the case of royalty payments from the licensing of digital transmissions of sound recordings under subsection (f) of section 114 of title 17, United States Code, the parties have voluntarily negotiated arrangements under which payments shall be made directly to featured recording artists and the administrators of the accounts provided in subsection (g)(2) of that section;

(2) such voluntarily negotiated payment arrangements have been codified in regulations issued by the Librarian of Congress, currently found in section 261.4 of title 37, Code of Federal Regulations, as published in the Federal Register on July 8, 2002;

(3) other regulations issued by the Librarian of Congress were inconsistent with the voluntarily negotiated arrangements by such parties concerning the deductibility of certain costs incurred for licensing and arbitration, and Congress is therefore restoring those terms as originally negotiated among the parties; and

(4) in light of the special circumstances described in this subsection, the uncertainty created by the regulations issued by the Librarian of Congress, and the fact that all of the interested parties have reached agreement, the voluntarily negotiated arrangements agreed to among the parties are being codified.

(b) Deductibility.—Section 114(g) of title 17, United States Code, is amended by adding after paragraph (2) the following:

"(3) A nonprofit agent designated to distribute receipts from the licensing of transmissions in accordance with subsection (f) may deduct from any of its receipts, prior to the distribution of such receipts to any person or entity entitled thereto other than copyright owners and performers who have elected to receive royalties from another designated agent and have notified such nonprofit agent in writing of such election, the reasonable costs of such agent incurred after November 1, 1995, in—

"(A) the administration of the collection, distribution, and calculation of the royalties;

"(B) the settlement of disputes relating to the collection and calculation of the royalties; and

"(C) the licensing and enforcement of rights with respect to the making of ephemeral recordings and performances subject to licensing under section 112 and this section, including those incurred in participating in negotiations or arbitration proceedings under section 112 and this section, except that all costs incurred relating to the section 112 ephemeral recordings right may only be deducted from the royalties received pursuant to section 112.

"(4) Notwithstanding paragraph (3), any designated agent designated to distribute receipts from the licensing of transmissions in accordance with subsection (f) may deduct from any of its receipts, prior to the distribution of such receipts, the reasonable costs identified in paragraph (3) of such agent incurred after November 1, 1995, with respect to such copyright owners and performers who have entered with such agent a contractual relationship that specifies that such costs may be deducted from such royalty receipts.".

(c) Direct Payment to Artists.—Section 114(g)(2) of title 17, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(2) An agent designated to distribute receipts from the licensing of transmissions in accordance with subsection (f) shall distribute such receipts as follows:

"(A) 50 percent of the receipts shall be paid to the copyright owner of the exclusive right under section 106(6) of this title to publicly perform a sound recording by means of a digital audio transmission.

"(B) 2½ percent of the receipts shall be deposited in an escrow account managed by an independent administrator jointly appointed by copyright owners of sound recordings and the American Federation of Musicians (or any successor entity) to be distributed to nonfeatured musicians (whether or not members of the American Federation of Musicians) who have performed on sound recordings.

"(C) 2½ percent of the receipts shall be deposited in an escrow account managed by an independent administrator jointly appointed by copyright owners of sound recordings and the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists (or any successor entity) to be distributed to nonfeatured vocalists (whether or not members of the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists) who have performed on sound recordings.

"(D) 45 percent of the receipts shall be paid, on a per sound recording basis, to the recording artist or artists featured on such sound recording (or the persons conveying rights in the artists' performance in the sound recordings).".

SEC. 6. REPORT TO CONGRESS.

By not later than June 1, 2004, the Comptroller General of the United States, in consultation with the Register of Copyrights, shall conduct and submit to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate a study concerning the economic arrangements among small commercial webcasters covered by agreements entered into pursuant to section 114(f)(5)(A) of title 17, United States Code, as added by section 4 of this Act, and third parties, and the effect of those arrangements on royalty fees payable on a percentage of revenue or expense basis.

SEC. 206. PROMOTING SECURE DELIVERY OF HUMANITARIAN AND OTHER ASSISTANCE IN AFGHANISTAN AND EXPANSION OF THE INTERNATIONAL SECURITY ASSISTANCE FORCE.

(a) Findings.—Congress finds the following:

(1) The President has declared his view that the United States should provide significant assistance to Afghanistan so that it is no longer a haven for terrorism.

(2) The delivery of humanitarian and reconstruction assistance from the international community is necessary for the safe return of refugees and is critical to the future stability of Afghanistan.

(3) Enhanced stability in Afghanistan through an improved security environment is critical to the functioning of the Government of Afghanistan and the traditional Afghan assembly or "Loya Jirga" process, which is intended to lead to a permanent national government in Afghanistan, and also is essential for the participation of women in Afghan society.

(4) Incidents of violence between armed factions and local and regional commanders, and serious abuses of human rights, including attacks on women and ethnic minorities throughout Afghanistan, create an insecure, volatile, and unsafe environment in parts of Afghanistan, displacing thousands of Afghan civilians from their local communities.

(5)(A) On July 6, Vice President Haji Abdul Qadir was assassinated in Kabul by unknown assailants.

(B) On September 5, 2002, a car bomb exploded in Kabul killing 32 and injuring 150 and on the same day a member of Kandahar Governor Sherzai's security team attempted to assassinate President Karzai.

(6) The violence and lawlessness may jeopardize the "Loya Jirga" process, undermine efforts to build a strong central government, severely impede reconstruction and the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and increase the likelihood that parts of Afghanistan will once again become safe havens for al-Qaida, Taliban forces, and drug traffickers.

(7) The lack of security and lawlessness may also perpetuate the need for United States Armed Forces in Afghanistan and threaten the ability of the United States to meet its military objectives.

(8) The International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan, currently led by Turkey, and composed of forces from other willing countries without the participation of United States Armed Forces, is deployed only in Kabul and currently does not have the mandate or the capacity to provide security to other parts of Afghanistan.

(9) Due to the ongoing military campaign in Afghanistan, the United States does not contribute troops to the International Security Assistance Force but has provided support to other countries that are doing so.

(10) The United States is providing political, financial, training, and other assistance to the Afghan Interim Authority as it begins to build a national army and police force to help provide security throughout Afghanistan, but this effort is not meeting the immediate security needs of Afghanistan.

(11) Because of these immediate security needs, the Government of Afghanistan, its President, Hamid Karzai, and many Afghan regional leaders have called for the International Security Assistance Force, which has successfully brought stability to Kabul, to be expanded and deployed throughout the country, and this request has been strongly supported by a wide range of international humanitarian organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, Catholic Relief Services, and Refugees International.

(b) Statement of Policy.—It should be the policy of the United States to support measures to help meet the immediate security needs of Afghanistan in order to promote safe and effective delivery of humanitarian and other assistance throughout Afghanistan, further the rule of law and civil order, and support the formation of a functioning, representative Afghan national government.

(c) Implementation of Strategy.—

(1) Initial report.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President shall provide the Committee on International Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate with—

(A) a strategy for meeting the immediate and long-term security needs of Afghanistan in order to promote safe and effective delivery of humanitarian and other assistance throughout Afghanistan, further the rule of law and civil order, and support the formation of a functioning, representative Afghan national government, including an update to the strategies submitted pursuant to Public Law 107–206; and

(B) a description of the progress of the Government of Afghanistan toward the eradication of poppy cultivation, the disruption of heroin production, and the reduction of the overall supply and demand for illicit narcotics in Afghanistan in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2) Implementation of strategy.—Every 6 months after the enactment of this Act through January 1, 2007, the President shall submit to the congressional committees specified in paragraph (1) a report on the implementation of the strategies for meeting the immediate and long-term security needs of Afghanistan, which shall include the following elements—

(A) since the previous report, the progress in recruiting, training, and deploying an Afghan National Army and police force, including the numbers and ethnic composition of recruits; the number of graduates from military and police training; the numbers of graduates retained by the Afghan National Army and police forces since the previous report; the numbers of graduates operationally deployed and to which areas of the country; the degree to which these graduates are assuming security responsibilities; whether Afghan army and police units are establishing effective central governmental authority over areas of the country, and which areas; and the numbers of instances of armed attacks against Afghan central governmental officials, United States or international officials, troops or aid workers, or between the armed forces of regional leaders;

(B) the degree to which armed regional leaders are cooperating and integrating with the central government, providing security and order within their regions of influence, engaging in armed conflict or other forms of competition that are deleterious to peace, security, and the integration of a unified Afghanistan under the central government;

(C) the amount of humanitarian relief provided since the previous report to returnees, isolated populations and other vulnerable groups, as well as demining assistance and landmine survivors rehabilitation; and the numbers of such persons not assisted since the previous report;

(D) the steps taken since the previous report toward national reconstruction, including establishment of the ministries and other institutions of the Government of Afghanistan;

(E) the numbers of Civil Affairs Teams working with regional leaders, as well as the quick impact infrastructure projects undertaken by such teams since the previous report;

(F) efforts undertaken since the previous report to rebuild the justice sector, including the establishment of a functioning judiciary, a competent bar, reintegration of women legal professionals and a reliable penal system, and the respect for human rights; and

(G) a description of the progress of the Government of Afghanistan with respect to the matters described in paragraph (1)(B).

(d) EXPANSION OF THE INTERNATIONAL SECURITY ASSISTANCE FORCE.—

(1) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—Congress urges the President, in order to fulfill the objective of establishing security in Afghanistan, to take all appropriate measures to assist Afghanistan establish a secure environment throughout the country, including by—

(A) sponsoring in the United Nations Security Council a resolution authorizing an expansion of the International Security Assistance Force, or the establishment of a similar security force; and

(B) enlisting the European and other allies of the United States to provide forces for an expansion of the International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan, or the establishment of a similar security force.

(2) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—(A) There is authorized to be appropriated to the President $500,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004 to support the International Security Assistance Force or the establishment of a similar security force.

(B) Amounts made available under subparagraph (A) may be appropriated pursuant to chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, section 551 of such Act, or section 23 of the Arms Export Control Act.

(C) Funds appropriated pursuant to subparagraph (A) shall be subject to the notification requirements under section 634A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

On page 63, line 24, insert "and the Committee on Appropriations" after "Relations".

On page 63, line 25, insert "and the Committee on Appropriations" after "Relations".

On page 69, line 5, strike "any other provision of law" and insert "section 512 of Public Law 107–115 or any similar provision of law".

Beginning on page 69, strike line 6 and all that follows through line 4 on page 70.

On page 70, line 5, strike "sec. 209." and insert " sec. 208."

On page 70, line 7, strike "2005" and insert "2006".

On page 70, after line 7, add the following:

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. REQUIREMENT TO COMPLY WITH PROCEDURES RELATING TO THE PROHIBITION ON ASSISTANCE TO DRUG TRAFFICKERS.

Assistance provided under this Act shall be subject to the same provisions as are applicable to assistance under the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Arms Export Control Act under section 487 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (relating to the prohibition on assistance to drug traffickers; 22 U.S.C. 2291f), and the applicable regulations issued under that section.

SEC. 302. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING PROTECTING AFGHANISTAN'S PRESIDENT.

It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) any United States physical protection force provided for the personal security of the President of Afghanistan should be composed of United States diplomatic security, law-enforcement, or military personnel, and should not utilize private contracted personnel to provide actual physical protection services;

(2) United States allies should be invited to volunteer active-duty military or law enforcement personnel to participate in such a protection force; and

(3) such a protection force should be limited in duration and should be succeeded by qualified Afghan security forces as soon as practicable.

SEC. 303. DONOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO AFGHANISTAN AND REPORTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that inadequate amounts of international assistance promised by donor states at the Tokyo donors conference and elsewhere have been delivered to Afghanistan, imperiling the rebuilding and development of civil society and infrastructure, and endangering peace and security in that war-torn country.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the United States should use all appropriate diplomatic means to encourage all states that have pledged assistance to Afghanistan to deliver as soon as possible the total amount of assistance pledged.

(c) REPORTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of State shall submit reports to the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate and the Committee on International Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, in accordance with this paragraph, on the status of contributions of assistance from donor states to Afghanistan. The first report shall be submitted not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the second report shall be submitted 90 days thereafter, and subsequent reports shall be submitted every 180 days thereafter through December 31, 2004.

(2) FURTHER REQUIREMENTS.—Each report, which shall be unclassified and posted upon the Department of State's Internet website, shall include, by donor country, the total amount pledged, the amount delivered within the previous 60 days, the total amount of assistance delivered, the type of assistance and type of projects supported by the assistance.

SA 4957. Mr. REID (for Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. BROWNBACK, and Mr. HOLLINGS)) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 2869, to facilitate the ability of certain spectrum auction winners to pursue alternative measures required in the public interest to meet the needs of wireless telecommunications consumers; as follows:

SECTION 1. RELIEF FROM CONTINUING OBLIGATIONS.

A winning bidder to which the Commission has not granted an Auction 35 license may irrevocably elect to relinquish any right, title, or interest in that license and the associated license application by formal written notice to the Commission. Such an election may only be made within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act. A winning bidder that makes such an election shall be free of any obligation the winning bidder would otherwise have with respect to that license, the associated license application, and the associated winning bid, including the obligation to pay the amount of its winning bid that would be otherwise due for such license.

SEC. 2. RETURN OF DEPOSITS AND DOWNPAYMENTS.

Within 37 days after receiving an election that meets the requirements of section 3 from an Auction 35 winning bidder that has made the election described in section 1, the Commission shall refund any deposit or down-payment made with respect to a winning bidder for the license that is the subject of the election.

SEC. 3. COMMISSION TO ISSUE PUBLIC NOTICE.

(a) PUBLIC NOTICE.—Within 5 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Commission shall issue a public notice specifying the form and the process for the return of deposits and downpayments under section 2.

(b) TIME FOR ELECTION.—An election under this section is not valid unless it is made within 30 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4. WAIVER OF PAPERWORK REDUCTION ACT REQUIREMENTS.

Section 3507 of title 44, United States Code, shall not apply to the Commission's implementation of this Act.

SEC. 5. NO INFERENCE WITH RESPECT TO NEXTWAVE CASE.

It is the sense of the Congress that no inference with respect to any issue of law or fact in Federal Communications Commission v. NextWAVE Personal Communications, Inc., et al. (Supreme Court Docket No. 01–653) should be drawn from the introduction, amendment, defeat, or enactment of this Act.

SEC. 6. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act:

(1) AUCTION 35.—The term "Auction 35" means the C and F block broadband personal communications service spectrum auction of the Commission that began on December 1,

2000, and ended on January 6, 2001, insofar as that auction related to spectrum previously licensed to NextWave Personal Communications, Inc., NextWave Power Partners, Inc., or Urban Comm North Carolina, Inc.

(3) WINNING BIDDER.—The term "winning bidder" means any person who is entitled under Commission order FCC 02-99 (released March 27, 2002), to a refund of a substantial portion of monies on deposit for spectrum formerly licensed to NextWave and Urban Comm as defined in that order.

SA 4958. Mr. REID (for Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. GREGG, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. FRIST)) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 4664, An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, and 2007 for the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Science Foundation Authorization Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) The National Science Foundation has made major contributions for more than 50 years to strengthen and sustain the Nation's academic research enterprise that is the envy of the world.

(2) The economic strength and national security of the United States and the quality of life of all Americans are grounded in the Nation's scientific and technological capabilities.

(3) The National Science Foundation carries out important functions in supporting basic research in all science and engineering disciplines and in supporting science, mathematics, engineering, and technology education at all levels.

(4) The research and education activities of the National Science Foundation promote the discovery, integration, dissemination, and application of new knowledge in service to society and prepare future generations of scientists, mathematicians, and engineers who will be necessary to ensure America's leadership in the global marketplace.

(5) The National Science Foundation must be provided with sufficient resources to enable it to carry out its responsibilities to develop intellectual capital, strengthen the scientific infrastructure, integrate research and education, enhance the delivery of mathematics and science education in the United States, and improve the technological literacy of all people in the United States.

(6) The emerging global economic, scientific, and technical environment challenges long-standing assumptions about domestic and international policy, requiring the National Science Foundation to play a more proactive role in sustaining the competitive advantage of the United States through superior research capabilities.

SMALL WEBCASTER AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2002

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5469.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H.R. 5469) to amend title 17, United States Code, with respect to the statutory license for webcasting.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. LEAHY. Madam President, I am pleased that the Senate is taking the important step of passing H.R. 5469, the "Small Webcaster Amendments Act of 2002." This legislation reflects hard choices made in hard negotiations under hard circumstances. I commend House Judiciary Chairman SENSENBRENNER and Representative CONYERS for bringing this legislation to a successful conclusion and passage in the House of Representatives in a timely fashion to make a difference in the prospects of many small webcasters. I also thank Senator HELMS and his staff for working in the lame duck session of this Congress to get the bill done.

The Internet is an American invention that has become the emblem of the Information Age and an engine for bringing American content into homes and businesses around the globe. I have long been an enthusiast and champion of the Internet and of the creative spirits who are the source of the music, films, books, news, and entertainment content that enrich our lives, energize our economy and influence our culture. As a citizen, I am impressed by the innovation of new online entrepreneurs, and as a Senator, I want to do everything possible to promote the full realization of the Internet's potential. A flourishing Internet with clear, fair and enforceable rules governing how content may be used will benefit all of us, including the entrepreneurs who want us to become new customers and the artists who create the content we value.

The advent of webcasting, streaming music online rather than broadcasting it over the air as traditional radio stations do, has marked one of the more exciting and quickly growing of the new industries that have sprung up on the Web. Many of the new webcasters, unconstrained by the technological limitations of traditional radio transmission, can and do serve listeners across the country and around the world. They provide music in specialized niches not available over the air. They feature new and fringe artists who do not enjoy the few spots in the Top 40. And they can bring music of all types to listeners who, for whatever reason, are not being catered to by traditional broadcasters.

We have been mindful on this Committee that as the Internet is a boon to consumers, we must not neglect the artists who create and the businesses which produce the digital works that make the online world so fascinating and worth visiting. With each legislative effort to provide clear, fair and enforceable intellectual property rules for the Internet, a fundamental principle to which we have adhered is that artists and producers of digital works merit compensation for the value derived from the use of their work.

In 1995, we enacted the Digital Performance Right in Sound Recordings Act, which created an intellectual property right in digital sound recordings, giving copyright owners the right to receive royalties when their copyrighted sound recordings were digitally transmitted by others. Therefore when their copyrighted sound recordings are digitally transmitted, royalties are due. In the 1998 Digital Millennium Copyright Act, DMCA, we made clear that this law applied to webcasters and that they would have to pay these royalties. At the same time, we created a compulsory license so that webcasters could be sure of the use of these digital works. We directed that the appropriate royalty rate could be negotiated by the parties or determined by a Copyright Arbitration Royalty Panel, or CARP, at the Library of Congress.

Despite some privately negotiated agreements, no industry-wide agreement on royalty rates was reached and therefore a CARP proceeding was instituted that concluded on February 20, 2002. The CARP decision set the royalty rate to be paid by commercial webcasters, no matter their size, at .14 cents per song per listener, with royalty payments retroactive to October 1998, when the DMCA was passed.

At a Judiciary Committee hearing I convened on this issue on May 15, 2002, nobody seemed happy with the outcome of the arbitration and, in fact, all the parties appealed. The recording industry and artist representatives feel that the royalty rate, which was based on the number of performances and listeners, rather than on a percentage-of-revenue model, was too low to adequately compensate the creative efforts of the artists and the financial investments of the labels. Many webcasters declared that the per-performance approach, and the rate attached to it, would bankrupt small operations and drain the large ones. I said then that such an outcome would be highly unfortunate not only for the webcasters but also for the artists, the labels and the consumers, who all would lose important legitimate channels to connect music and music lovers online.

On appeal, the Librarian in June, 2002, cut the rate in half, to .07 cents per song per listener for commercial webcasters. Nevertheless, many webcasters, who had been operating during the four-year period between 1998 and 2002, were taken by surprise at the amount of their royalty liability. The retroactive fees were to be paid in full by October 20th and would have resulted in many small webcasters in particular, going out of business.

In order to avoid many webcasting streams going silent on October 20, when retroactive royalty payments are due, I urged all sides to avoid more expense and time and reach a negotiated outcome more satisfactory to all participants than the Librarian's decision. I also monitored closely the progress of negotiations between the RIAA and webcasters. On July 31, I sent a letter with Senator HATCH to Sound Exchange, which was created by the RIAA to act as the agent for copyright holders in negotiating the voluntary licenses with webcasters under the DMCA and to serve as the receiving agent for royalties under the CARP process. The letter posed questions on the status of the reported on-going negotiations between RIAA/Sound Exchange and the smaller webcasters, the terms being proposed and considered, and how likely the outcome of those negotiations would be to produce viable deals for smaller webcasters, while still satisfying the copyright community.

Reports on the progress of these negotiations were disappointing, which makes this legislation all the more important. As a general principle, marketplace negotiations are the appropriate mechanism for determining the allocation of compensation among interested parties under copyright law. Yet, we have made exceptions to this general principle, as reflected in this legislation and the very compulsory license provisions it amends.

The legislation reflects a compromise for all the parties directly affected by this legislation—small webcasters, noncommercial webcasters, and hobbyists that could not survive with the rates set by the Librarian, and copyright owners and performers who under this bill will give certain eligible webcasters an alternative royalty payment scheme. This legislation does not represent a complete victory for any of these stakeholders. Artists and music labels may believe that they are forgoing significant royalties under this legislation and I appreciate that they are those in the webcasting business, who are either not covered or not sufficiently helped by the bill, who believe that this legislation should do more. As one analyst at the Radio and Internet Newsletter stated, in the October 11, 2002 issue, "Clearly, the 'Small Webcaster Amendments Act of 2002' (a/k/a H.R. 5469) is an imperfect bill that doesn't fix everything for everybody; Still, overall, does it do more good than harm for more people? My belief is that many are helped one way or the other and virtually no one is assured of being hurt. Thus, the answer, on the whole, would be yes."

I know that most webcasters share my belief that artists and labels should be fairly compensated for use of their creative works. This legislation provides both compensation to the copyright owners and helps to support the webcasting industry by offering more variable payment options to small webcasters than the one-size-fits all per performance rate set out in the original CARP and Librarian decisions. The rates, terms and record-keeping provisions are applicable only to the parties that qualify for and elect to be governed by this alternative royalty structure and no broad principles should be extrapolated from the rates, terms and record-keeping provisions contained in the bill. The Copyright Office is presently engaged in a rule-making on record-keeping and this bill does not supplant that ongoing process.

After the House passed H.R. 5469 on October 7, 2002, I have worked with Senator HATCH to clear the bill for passage through the Senate and address concerns raised on both sides of the aisle. While the bill was finally cleared for passage by all the Democratic Senators on October 17, passage of the legislation was blocked before the lame-duck session. I am pleased to have worked with Senator HELMS on a substitute that resolves some of the concerns raised about the original House-passed bill.

The Helms-Leahy substitute makes the following changes in H.R. 5469:

First, it authorizes SoundExchange to enter into agreements with groups representing small webcasters and noncommercial webcasters. Such agreements will be available generally to any party which qualifies under their terms as an option to the rates adopted by the Copyright Office. The rates and terms of such agreements will be binding on all copyright holders once the agreement has been published in the Federal Register by the Copyright Office. Such deals are authorized to cover the retroactive fees, as well as those going forward.

Second, the substitute amendment imposes a 6 month moratorium on fee collections from noncommercial entities, to allow for negotiations with such entities. This provision is particularly important for noncommercial webcasters, such as those operating at colleges and universities. The Librarian's decision contained an anomaly under which nonprofit entities that held FCC licenses were given a lower per performance rate than were commercial entities, but no such provision was made for noncommercial entities that were not FCC licensees. The bill provides a moratorium on the collection of royalties in order for an alternative agreement to be reached.

It also authorizes Sound Exchange to postpone retroactive royalty collections from small webcasters with whom it is negotiating deals. The original House-passed bill recognized the retroactive burden on many of the small commercial webcasters by allowing them to make their payments based on a percentage of revenue or percentage of expense, but also allows both small commercial and noncommercial webcasters to pay these retroactive fees in three payments over he span of a year.

Third, the substitute amendment adopts language making clear that such deals are not precedent in any judicial proceeding or in future CARPs.

Fourth, the substitute amendment provides for direct payment to artists and deductibility of expenses from the proceeds of the royalties.

Finally, the substitute amendment authorizes a GAO/Copyright Office study on the impact of agreements between third parties and webcasters and the effect that such agreements should have on percentage of expense royalty rates. This authorization does not contain any preliminary findings or sense of the Congress language as to how such study should be resolved.

The agreement to be negotiated between Sound Exchange and small webcasters will likely reflect the rates and terms set forth in the original House-passed bill. These terms provide an option of paying a percentage of revenue and stay in business. As one Vermont webcaster told me, "Although the percentage of revenue is too high, at least we have the option. A percentage of revenue deal with enable [us] to stay in business moving forward, grow our audience, and compete."

The Librarian of Congress royalty rate is based on a per performance formula, which has the unfortunate effect of requiring webcasters to pay high fees for their use of music, even before the audience of the webcaster has grown to a sufficient size to attract any appreciable advertising revenues. Without any percentage of revenue option (as the legislation allows), the webcasting industry would be closed to all but those with the substantial resources necessary to subsidize the business until the advertising revenues caught up to the per performance royalty rate.

A number of concerns have been raised that the rate and terms of the agreements authorized under the substitute amendment do not constitute evidence of any rates, rate structure, fees, definitions, conditions or terms that would have been negotiated in the marketplace between a willing buyer and willing seller. The concern stems from the DMCA's statutory license fee standard directing the CARP to establish rates and terms "that most clearly represent the rates and terms that would have been negotiated in the marketplace between a willing buyer and a willing seller," rather than a determination of "reasonable copyright royalty rates" according to a set of balancing factors. This new webcasting standard may be having the unfortunate and unintended result that webcasters and copyright owners are concerned that the rates and terms of any voluntary licensing agreements will be applied industry-wide. The new webcasting standard appears to be making all sides cautious and reluctant to enter into, rather than facilitating, voluntary licensing agreements.

Passage of this legislation does not mean that our work is done. As this webcasting issue has unfolded, I have heard complaints from all sides about the fairness and completeness of procedures employed in the arbitration. Indeed, the concerns of many small webcasters were never heard, since the cost of participating in the proceedings was prohibitively expensive and their ability to participate for free was barred by procedural rules. One thing is clear: Compulsory licenses are no panacea and their implementation may only invite more congressional intervention. To avoid repeated requests for the Congress or the courts to intercede, we must make sure the procedures and standards used to establish the royalty rates for the webcasting and other compulsory licenses produce fair, workable results. Next year, we should focus attention on reforming the CARP process.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Helms amendment at the desk be agreed to; the bill, as amended, be read a third time, passed, and the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, with no intervening action or debate.

[(5) The special emergency situation in Afghanistan, which from the perspective of the American people combines security, humanitarian, political, law enforcement, and development imperatives, requires that the President should receive maximum flexibility in designing, coordinating, and administering efforts with respect to assistance for Afghanistan and that a temporary special program of such assistance should be established for this purpose.

[(6) To foster stability and democratization and to effectively eliminate the causes of terrorism, the United States and the international community should also support efforts that advance the development of democratic civil authorities and institutions in the broader Central Asia region.

[SEC. 102. PURPOSES OF ASSISTANCE.

[The purposes of assistance authorized by this title are—

[TITLE II—MILITARY ASSISTANCE FOR AFGHANISTAN AND CERTAIN OTHER FOREIGN COUNTRIES AND INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

[SEC. 201. SUPPORT FOR SECURITY DURING TRANSITION IN AFGHANISTAN.

[It is the sense of Congress that, during the transition to a broad-based, multi-ethnic, gender-sensitive, fully representative government in Afghanistan, the United States should support—

[SEC. 203. ELIGIBLE FOREIGN COUNTRIES AND ELIGIBLE INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS.

[(a) ELIGIBILITY FOR ASSISTANCE.—

[(2) EXCEPTION.—No country the government of which has been determined by the Secretary of State to have repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism under section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371), section 6(j)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U:S.C. App. 2405(j)(1)), or section 40(d) of the Arms Export Control Act (22 U.S.C.

2780(d)) shall be eligible to receive assistance under section 202.

[(b) WAIVER.—The President may waive the application of subsection (a)(2) if the President determines that it is important to the national security interest of the United States to do so.

[(2) AVAILABILITY.—Amounts appropriated pursuant to the authorization of appropriations under paragraph (1) are authorized to remain available until expended, and are in addition to amounts otherwise available for the purposes described in this title.

[SEC. 205. ELIGIBLE FOREIGN COUNTRIES AND ELIGIBLE INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS.

[(a) AUTHORITY.—The President may provide assistance under this title to any eligible foreign country or eligible international organization if the President determines that such assistance is important to the national security interest of the United States and notifies the Committee on International Relations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate of such determination at least 15 days in advance of providing such assistance.

[(b) NOTIFICATION.—The report described in subsection (a) shall be submitted in classified and unclassified form and shall include information relating to the type and amount of assistance proposed to be provided and the actions that the proposed recipient of such assistance has taken or has committed to take.

[SEC. 206. PROMOTING SECURE DELIVERY OF HUMANITARIAN AND OTHER ASSISTANCE IN AFGHANISTAN.

[(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

[(1) The President has declared his view that the United States should provide significant assistance to Afghanistan so that it never again becomes a haven for terrorism.

[(2) The delivery of humanitarian and reconstruction assistance from the international community is necessary for the safe return of refugees and is critical to the future stability of Afghanistan.

[(3) Enhanced stability in Afghanistan through an improved security environment is critical to the fostering of the Afghan Interim Authority and the traditional Afghan assembly or "Loya Jirga" process, which is intended to lead to a permanent national government in Afghanistan, and also is essential for the participation of women in Afghan society.

[(4) Incidents of violence between armed factions and local and regional commanders, and serious abuses of human rights, including attacks on women and ethnic minorities throughout Afghanistan, create an insecure, volatile, and unsafe environment in parts of Afghanistan, displacing thousands of Afghan civilians from their local communities.

[(5) The violence and lawlessness may jeopardize the "Loya Jirga" process, undermine efforts to build a strong central government, severely impede reconstruction and the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and increase the likelihood that parts of Afghanistan will once again become safe havens for al-Qaida, Taliban forces, and drug traffickers.

[(6) The lack of security and lawlessness may also perpetuate the need for United States Armed Forces in Afghanistan and threaten the ability of the United States to meet its military objectives.

[(7) The International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan, currently led by Turkey, and composed of forces from other willing countries without the participation of United States Armed Forces, is deployed only in Kabul and currently does not have the mandate or the capacity to provide security to other parts of Afghanistan.

[(8) Due to the ongoing military campaign in Afghanistan, the United States does not contribute troops to the International Security Assistance Force but has provided support to other countries that are doing so.

[(9) The United States is providing political, financial, training, and other assistance to the Afghan Interim Authority as it begins to build a national army and police force to help provide security throughout Afghanistan, but this effort is not meeting the immediate security needs of Afghanistan.

[(10) Because of these immediate security needs, the Afghan Interim Authority, its Chairman, Hamid Karzai, and many Afghan regional leaders have called for the International Security Assistance Force, which has successfully brought stability to Kabul, to be expanded and deployed throughout the country, and this request has been strongly supported by a wide range of international humanitarian organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, Catholic Relief Services, and Refugees International.

[(11)(A) On January 29, 2002, the President stated that "[w]e will help the new Afghan government provide the security that is the foundation of peace".

[(B) On March 25, 2002, the Secretary of Defense stated, with respect to the reconstruction of Afghanistan, that "the first thing . . . you need for anything else to happen, for hospitals to happen, for roads to happen, for refugees to come back, for people to be fed and humanitarian workers to move on the country . . . [y]ou've got to have security".

[(b) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—It should be the policy of the United States to support measures to help meet the immediate security needs of Afghanistan in order to promote safe and effective delivery of humanitarian and other assistance throughout Afghanistan, further the rule of law and civil order, and support the formation of a functioning, representative Afghan national government.

[(c) PREPARATION OF STRATEGY.—Not later than 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every six months thereafter, the President shall transmit to the Committee on International Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate a strategy for meeting the immediate and long-term security needs of Afghanistan in order to promote safe and effective delivery of humanitarian and other assistance throughout Afghanistan, further the rule of law and civil order, and support the formation of a functioning, representative Afghan national government.

[The authority of this title shall expire after December 31, 2004.

[TITLE III—ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ASSISTANCE FOR AFGHANISTAN

(1) The United States and the international community should support efforts that advance the development of democratic civil authorities and institutions in Afghanistan and the establishment of a new broad-based, multi-ethnic, gender-sensitive, and fully representative government in Afghanistan.

(2) The United States, in particular, should provide its expertise to meet immediate humanitarian and refugee needs, fight the production and flow of illicit narcotics, and aid in the reconstruction of Afghanistan.

(3) By promoting peace and security in Afghanistan and preventing a return to conflict, the United States and the international community can help ensure that Afghanistan does not again become a source for international terrorism.

(4) The United States should support the objectives agreed to on December 5, 2001, in Bonn, Germany, regarding the provisional arrangement for Afghanistan as it moves toward the establishment of permanent institutions and, in particular, should work intensively toward ensuring the future neutrality of Afghanistan, establishing the principle that neighboring countries and other countries in the region do not threaten or interfere in one another's sovereignty, territorial integrity, or political independence, including supporting diplomatic initiatives to support this goal.

(5) The special emergency situation in Afghanistan, which from the perspective of the American people combines security, humanitarian, political, law enforcement, and development imperatives, requires that the President should receive maximum flexibility in designing, coordinating, and administering efforts with respect to assistance for Afghanistan and that a temporary special program of such assistance should be established for this purpose.

(6) To foster stability and democratization and to effectively eliminate the causes of terrorism, the United States and the international community should also support efforts that advance the development of democratic civil authorities and institutions in the broader Central Asia region.

SEC. 102. PURPOSES OF ASSISTANCE.

The purposes of assistance authorized by this title are—

(1) to help assure the security of the United States and the world by reducing or eliminating the likelihood of violence against United States or allied forces in Afghanistan and to reduce the chance that Afghanistan will again be a source of international terrorism;

(2) to support the continued efforts of the United States and the international community to address the humanitarian crisis in Afghanistan and among Afghan refugees in neighboring countries;

(4) to help achieve a broad-based, multi-ethnic, gender-sensitive, and fully representative government in Afghanistan that is freely chosen by the people of Afghanistan and that respects the human rights of all Afghans, particularly women, including authorizing assistance for the rehabilitation and reconstruction of Afghanistan with a particular emphasis on meeting the educational, health, and sustenance needs of women and children to better enable their full participation in Afghan society;

SEC. 201. SUPPORT FOR SECURITY DURING TRANSITION IN AFGHANISTAN.

It is the sense of Congress that, during the transition to a broad-based, multi-ethnic, gender-sensitive, fully representative government in Afghanistan, the United States should support—

(B) such assistance is provided specifically for such operations in Afghanistan.

(2) EXCEPTION.—No country the government of which has been determined by the Secretary of State to have repeatedly provided support for acts of international terrorism under section 620A of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2371), section 6(j)(1) of the Export Administration Act of 1979 (50 U.S.C. (b) NOTIFICATION.—The report described in subsection (a) shall be submitted in classified and unclassified form and shall include information relating to the type and amount of assistance proposed to be provided and the actions that the proposed recipient of such assistance has taken or has committed to take.

SEC. 206. PROMOTING SECURE DELIVERY OF HUMANITARIAN AND OTHER ASSISTANCE IN AFGHANISTAN.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) The President has declared his view that the United States should provide significant assistance to Afghanistan so that it never again becomes a haven for terrorism.

(2) The delivery of humanitarian and reconstruction assistance from the international community is necessary for the safe return of refugees and is critical to the future stability of Afghanistan.

(3) Enhanced stability in Afghanistan through an improved security environment is critical to the fostering of the Afghan Interim Authority and the traditional Afghan assembly or "Loya Jirga" process, which is intended to lead to a permanent national government in Afghanistan, and also is essential for the participation of women in Afghan society.

(4) Incidents of violence between armed factions and local and regional commanders, and serious abuses of human rights, including attacks on women and ethnic minorities throughout Afghanistan, create an insecure, volatile, and unsafe environment in parts of Afghanistan, displacing thousands of Afghan civilians from their local communities.

(5) The violence and lawlessness may jeopardize the "Loya Jirga" process, undermine efforts to build a strong central government, severely impede reconstruction and the delivery of humanitarian assistance, and increase the likelihood that parts of Afghanistan will once again become safe havens for al-Qaida, Taliban forces, and drug traffickers.

(6) The lack of security and lawlessness may also perpetuate the need for United States Armed Forces in Afghanistan and threaten the ability of the United States to meet its military objectives.

(7) The International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan, currently led by Turkey, and composed of forces from other willing countries without the participation of United States Armed Forces, is deployed only in Kabul and currently does not have the mandate or the capacity to provide security to other parts of Afghanistan.

(8) Due to the ongoing military campaign in Afghanistan, the United States does not contribute troops to the International Security Assistance Force but has provided support to other countries that are doing so.

(9) The United States is providing political, financial, training, and other assistance to the Afghan Interim Authority as it begins to build a national army and police force to help provide security throughout Afghanistan, but this effort is not meeting the immediate security needs of Afghanistan.

(10) Because of these immediate security needs, the Afghan Interim Authority, its Chairman, Hamid Karzai, and many Afghan regional leaders have called for the International Security Assistance Force, which has successfully brought stability to Kabul, to be expanded and deployed throughout the country, and this request has been strongly supported by a wide range of international humanitarian organizations, including the International Committee of the Red Cross, Catholic Relief Services, and Refugees International.

(11)(A) On January 29, 2002, the President stated that "[w]e will help the new Afghan government provide the security that is the foundation of peace".

(B) On March 25, 2002, the Secretary of Defense stated, with respect to the reconstruction of Afghanistan, that "the first thing . . . you need for anything else to happen, for hospitals to happen, for roads to happen, for refugees to come back, for people to be fed and humanitarian workers to move on the country . . . [y]ou've got to have security".

(b) STATEMENT OF POLICY.—It should be the policy of the United States to support measures to help meet the immediate security needs of Afghanistan in order to promote safe and effective delivery of humanitarian and other assistance throughout Afghanistan, further the rule of law and civil order, and support the formation of a functioning, representative Afghan national government.

(c) PREPARATION OF STRATEGY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 45 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and every six months thereafter through January 1, 2006, the President shall provide the Committee on International Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Foreign Relations and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate with—

(A) a strategy for meeting the immediate and long-term security needs of Afghanistan in order to promote safe and effective delivery of humanitarian and other assistance throughout Afghanistan, further the rule of law and civil order, and support the formation of a functioning, representative Afghan national government; and

(B) a description of the progress of the Government of Afghanistan toward the eradication of poppy cultivation, the disruption of heroin production, and the reduction of the overall supply and demand for illicit narcotics in Afghanistan in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

(2) FORM OF INFORMATION.—The initial provision of information under paragraph (1) shall be made by transmittal of a written report. Thereafter, the information required under paragraph (1) may be provided in a written report or in an oral briefing.

SEC. 207. RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER AUTHORITY.

(a) ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY.—The authority to provide assistance under this title is in addition to any other authority to provide assistance to the Government of Afghanistan.

(b) LAWS RESTRICTING AUTHORITY.—Assistance under this title to the Government of Afghanistan may be provided notwithstanding any other provision of law.

SEC. 208. SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING EXPANSION OF THE INTERNATIONAL SECURITY ASSISTANCE FORCE; AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—Congress urges the President, in order to fulfill the objective of establishing security in Afghanistan, to use the full diplomatic influence of the United States to expand the International Security Assistance Force (ISAF) beyond Kabul, Afghanistan by—

(1) sponsoring in the United Nations Security Council a resolution authorizing such an expansion of that force;

(2) enlisting the European and other allies of the United States to provide forces for an expanded International Security Assistance Force in Afghanistan; and

(3) providing such financial and military assistance, including personnel, as the President considers necessary to achieve the expansion of the International Security Assistance Force.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the President $500,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003 and 2004 to provide the assistance described in subsection (a)(3).

S. CON. RES. 155

Whereas the President has sought the support of the international community in responding to the threat of terrorism, violent extremist organizations, and states that permit or host organizations that are opposed to democratic ideals;

Whereas a united stance against terrorism and terrorist regimes will likely lead to an increased threat to the armed forces and law enforcement personnel of those states that oppose these regimes of terror and that take an active role in rooting out these enemy forces;

Whereas Congress has aided and supported a united response to acts of terrorism and violence inflicted upon the United States, our allies, and peaceful individuals all over the world;

Whereas President Abraham Lincoln, at the outbreak of the Civil War, proclaimed that the last Thursday in September 1861 should be designated as a day of humility, prayer, and fasting for all people of the Nation;

Whereas it is appropriate and fitting to seek guidance, direction, and focus from God in times of conflict and in periods of turmoil;

Whereas it is through prayer, self-reflection, and fasting that we can better examine those elements of our lives that can benefit from God's wisdom and love;

Whereas prayer to God and the admission of human limitations and frailties begins the process of becoming both stronger and closer to God;

Whereas becoming closer to God helps provide direction, purpose, and conviction in those daily actions and decisions we must take;

Whereas our Nation, tested by civil war, military conflicts, and world wars, has always benefited from the grace and benevolence bestowed by God; and

Whereas dangers and threats to our Nation persist and in this time of peril, it is appropriate that the people of the United States, leaders and citizens alike, seek guidance, strength, and resolve through prayer and fasting: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) November 27, 2002, should be designated as a day for humility, prayer, and fasting for all people of the United States; and

(2) all people of the United States should—

(A) observe this day as a day of prayer and fasting;

(B) seek guidance from God to achieve greater understanding of our own failings;

(C) learn how we can do better in our everyday activities; and

(D) gain resolve in how to confront those challenges which we must confront.

COMMENDING AND CONGRATULATING THE ANAHEIM ANGELS

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. Res. 357, submitted earlier today by Senators FEINSTEIN and BOXER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution by title.

A resolution (S. Res. 357) commending and congratulating the Anaheim Angels for their remarkable spirit, resilience, and athletic discipline in winning the 2002 World Series.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Madam President, I rise today with my friend and colleague from California, Senator BARBARA BOXER, to commend and congratulate the Anaheim Angels for winning the 2002 World Series 3 weeks ago.

The Angels are world champions for the first time in their 42-year history. After defeating the New York Yankees in the first round of the playoffs and then going on to beat the Minnesota Twins for the American League Championship, the Angels battled my hometown team, the San Francisco Giants, in an exciting all-California World Series. The Angels have proven to the world their outstanding ability to win and work as a team.

Led by manager Mike Scioscia and players Scott Spezio, Garret Anderson, and Darin Erstad the Angels offense destroyed even the mightiest pitchers through October. Most Valuable Player Troy Glaus batted an astounding .385 average with three homeruns in the seven-game series.

Another key player in the Angels' march to glory is Troy Percival. The veteran closing pitcher stifled the Giants' hitters in pivotal game 7 and throughout the playoffs. Furthermore, Troy Percival would not have been able to perform his masterful pitching had it not been for starting pitcher John Lackey who pitched five strong innings in game 7.

Manager Mike Scioscia's leadership proved to be invaluable to the team. His experience as a catcher with Southern California's other major league franchise, the Los Angeles Dodgers, helped the Angels through what started as Anaheim's worst season ever and turned it into a glorious year.

The Anaheim Angels truly epitomize the importance of teamwork, as nearly every member of the roster contributed to their phenomenal season. It should be noted that the championship could not have been won without the dedication of the entire team: David Eckstein, Tim Salmon, Adam Kennedy, Bengie Molina, Brad Fullmer, Jarrod Washburn, Kevin Appier, Brendan Donnelly, Ben Weber, Ramon Ortiz, and Francisco Rodriguez.

I also would like to congratulate chairman and CEO of the Walt Disney Company Michael Eisner, General Manager Bill Stoneman and all of the Angels' staff on their hard work assembling Anaheim's first championship team. I should also congratulate Jackie Autry, widow of former Angels owner Gene Autry. One of her husband's greatest dreams was to see the Angels win a World Series.

And, most importantly, I would like to thank the Angels fans in Southern California who have earned national recognition for their enthusiasm and unbridled support of their team.

Finally, it is nearly impossible to congratulate the Angels or their fans without mentioning the "Rally Monkey," the adorable mascot that has become Anaheim's symbol of resilience and refusal to give up hope in the most difficult situations.

The Angels have begun a new era of baseball in Southern California and will certainly defend their title with the same heart and determination that brought them to the World Series this year. The Anaheim Angels are a team with an unquenchable desire to win.

They have made the city of Anaheim, the county of Orange, and all of California proud.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution and preamble be agreed to en bloc; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, with no intervening action or debate; and that any statements relating to the resolution be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 357) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. RES. 357

Whereas the Anaheim Angels have won the first World Championship in the 42 year history of the franchise;

Whereas the Anaheim Angels completed their best season in franchise history with 99 wins, staging one of the most significant team improvements in Major League Baseball since the 2001 season;

Whereas the 2002 World Series was the Anaheim Angels' first appearance in the Fall Classic;

Whereas the Anaheim Angels have fielded such superstars as Nolan Ryan, Rod Carew, Bobby Grich, Reggie Jackson, Jim Abbott, Wally Joyner, Brian Downing, Jim Edmonds, Gary DiSarcina, and now Troy Percival, Jarrod Washburn, Garret Anderson, Troy Glaus, and Tim Salmon;

Whereas third baseman Troy Glaus received the World Series Most Valuable Player Award for his stellar defensive plays, .385 batting average, and 3 home runs during the series;

Whereas pitcher Francisco Rodriguez became the youngest pitcher to win a World Series game and tied the postseason record for games won with 5 outstanding wins;

Whereas Manager Mike Scioscia won his first World Series title as a manager;

Whereas Tim Salmon made his first playoff appearance in 10 seasons as a major league baseball player, the only current player to have played that long without having reached the postseason;

Whereas the spirit of Gene Autry, the "Singing Cowboy" and former owner of the Angels, was undoubtedly ever-present with the Anaheim players throughout the series as he was an inspirational force to all who played for him and knew of his legacy;

Whereas the Anaheim Angels battled another California team deserving of acknowledgement: the San Francisco Giants;

Whereas the San Francisco Giants were a worthy rival for the Anaheim Angels and set the stage for an exciting and suspenseful World Series that was watched with great interest by many Californians;

Whereas the Anaheim Angels epitomize California pride with their incredible focus, dedication to winning, team cohesiveness, and devotion to playing America's pastime with class, athleticism, and enthusiasm; and

Whereas the Anaheim Angels demonstrate the rewards of perseverance, discipline, teamwork, and championship as they prepare to defend their title of World Champions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate congratulates the Anaheim Angels on winning the 2002 Major League Baseball World Series title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S. CON. RES. 94

Whereas census estimates indicate that some 42,000,000 people in the United States are without health insurance coverage, many of whom are among the most vulnerable and can be financially devastated by serious illness, disease, or accident;

Whereas studies have shown that people with health insurance are healthier than those who are uninsured and receive care through emergency rooms or safety net health care services, because the insured are entitled to, and receive, more preventive care, follow-up care, and care for chronic conditions such as diabetes and high blood pressure;

Whereas over 17,300,000 of the uninsured are employed but are not offered health insurance through their employers;

Whereas such employers are small business owners who are often unaware of the benefits of offering health insurance, including that such benefits are tax deductible, reduce employee turnover, and reduce employee sick days;

Whereas over 16,000,000 people in the United States, more than ⅓ of the uninsured, are in families where at least 1 member of the family has been offered employer based health care coverage but has declined coverage;

Whereas many individuals are eligible for public assistance programs such as the State Children's Health Insurance Program, known as SCHIP, and the medicaid program, but are not currently enrolled due primarily to lack of outreach, education, and accessible enrollment processes;

Whereas studies have shown that many individuals and small businesses are unaware of the various options they have for obtaining affordable health care coverage;

Whereas surveys have shown that many individuals who cite expense as the reason for not purchasing insurance find insurance affordable once they are informed of the true cost of various options; and

Whereas education about health care coverage helps uninsured individuals and employers understand the critical value of health insurance as a preventive measure and the ways to keep their health insurance premiums manageable once they have health care coverage: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) a National Importance of Health Care Coverage Month be established to—

(A) promote a multifaceted educational effort about the importance of health care coverage;

(B) increase awareness of the many available health care coverage options; and

(C) inform those eligible for public insurance programs on ways to access those programs; and

(2) the President issue a proclamation calling on the Federal Government, States, localities, citizens, and businesses of the United States to conduct appropriate programs, fairs, ceremonies, and activities to promote this educational effort.

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Prosecutorial Remedies and Tools Against the Exploitation of Children Today Act of 2002" or "PROTECT Act".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress finds the following:

(1) Obscenity and child pornography are not entitled to protection under the First Amendment under Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973) (obscenity), or New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982) (child pornography) and thus may be prohibited.

(2) The Government has a compelling state interest in protecting children from those who sexually exploit them, including both child molesters and child pornographers. "The prevention of sexual exploitation and abuse of children constitutes a government objective of surpassing importance," New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747, 757 (1982) (emphasis added), and this interest extends to stamping out the vice of child pornography at all levels in the distribution chain. Osborne v. Ohio, 495 U.S. 103, 110 (1990).

(3) The Government thus has a compelling interest in ensuring that the criminal prohibitions against child pornography remain enforceable and effective. "[T]he most expeditious if not the only practical method of law enforcement may be to dry up the market for this material by imposing severe criminal penalties on persons selling, advertising, or otherwise promoting the product." Ferber, 458 U.S. at 760.

(4) In 1982, when the Supreme Court decided Ferber, the technology did not exist to: (A) create depictions of virtual children that are indistinguishable from depictions of real children; (B) create depictions of virtual children using compositions of real children to create an unidentifiable child; or (C) disguise pictures of real children being abused by making the image look computer generated.

(5) Evidence submitted to the Congress, including from the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children, demonstrates that technology already exists to disguise depictions of real children to make them unidentifiable and to make depictions of real children appear computer generated. The technology will soon exist, if it does not already, to make depictions of virtual children look real.

(6) The vast majority of child pornography prosecutions today involve images contained on computer hard drives, computer disks, and/or related media.

(7) There is no substantial evidence that any of the child pornography images being trafficked today were made other than by the abuse of real children. Nevertheless, technological advances since Ferber have led many criminal defendants to suggest that the images of child pornography they possess are not those of real children, insisting that the government prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the images are not computer-generated. Such challenges will likely increase after the Ashcroft v. Free Speech Coalition decision.

(8) Child pornography circulating on the Internet has, by definition, been digitally uploaded or scanned into computers and has been transferred over the Internet, often in different file formats, from trafficker to trafficker. An image seized from a collector of child pornography is rarely a first-generation product, and the retransmission of images can alter the image so as to make it difficult for even an expert conclusively to opine that a particular image depicts a real child. If the original image has been scanned from a paper version into a digital format, this task can be even harder since proper forensic delineation may depend on the quality of the image scanned and the tools used to scan it.

(9) The impact on the government's ability to prosecute child pornography offenders is already evident. The Ninth Circuit has seen a significant adverse effect on prosecutions since the 1999 Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decision in Free Speech Coalition. After that decision, prosecutions generally have been brought in the Ninth Circuit only in the most clear-cut cases in which the government can specifically identify the child in the depiction or otherwise identify the origin of the image. This is a fraction of meritorious child pornography cases. The National Center for Missing and Exploited Children testified that, in light of the Supreme Court's affirmation of the Ninth Circuit decision, prosecutors in various parts of the country have expressed concern about the continued viability of previously indicted cases as well as declined potentially meritorious prosecutions.

(10) In the absence of congressional action, this problem will continue to grow increasingly worse. The mere prospect that the technology exists to create computer or computer-generated depictions that are indistinguishable from depictions of real children will allow defendants who possess images of real children to escape prosecution, for it threatens to create a reasonable doubt in every case of computer images even when a real child was abused. This threatens to render child pornography laws that protect real children unenforceable.

(11) To avoid this grave threat to the Government's unquestioned compelling interest in effective enforcement of the child pornography laws that protect real children, a statute must be adopted that prohibits a narrowly-defined subcategory of images.

(12) The Supreme Court's 1982 Ferber v. New York decision holding that child pornography was not protected drove child pornography off the shelves of adult bookstores. Congressional action is necessary to ensure that open and notorious trafficking in such materials does not reappear.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 2002

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the HELP Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 4664 and the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4664) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2003, 2004, and 2005 for the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. KENNEDY. Madam President, I am pleased the Senate will consider and pass today, the National Science Foundation Doubling Act. This bill is the product of extensive biparptisan, bicameral negotiations among the House of Representatives Committee on Science, the Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions, and the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation. It is based on S. 2817, which I introduced with Senator HOLLINGS, Senator MIKULSKI, and Senator BOND. I commend them, together with Senator GREGG, Senator MCCAIN, House Science Committee Chairman BOEHLERT, Congressman NICK SMITH, and Congressman RALPH HALL for their leadership in crafting this important legislation.

NSF performs two key functions for the federal governmnet and the broader research community. It supports basic research and development in math, science, engineering, and technology, and it promotes math and science learning at every level, from K–12 through post-graduate education.

Few people realize how influential NSF has been to their daily lives. NSF has funded basic research leading to the creation of doppler weather radar, retail bar codes, speech recognition software, magnetic resonance imaging machines, and even World Wide Web browsers, such as Netscape and Microsoft's Internet Explorer. NSF education initiatives of the late 1980s were the forerunners of the standards-based school reform movement embraced throughout the Nation today and most recently in the new No Child Left Behind Act governing nearly all federal elementary and secondary education programs.

We can and should build on NSF's record in improving the lives of millions of Americans. The 20th Century was the era of the industrial age, and the 21st Century will be the era of information technology and the life sciences.

The bill before us doubles NSF's budget authority over the next five years. It matches the growth of the National Institutes of Health over the last five years. We double budget authority for research and development in the physical sciences and theoretical mathematics, because they support advances in the health sciences and because they are valuable in their own right.

I am particularly proud that the legislation before us authorizes a new secondary school systemic initiative at NSF that will develop model school reforms to improve high school student math and science performance and better prepare all students for college-level and technical work. For too long, federal policy has paid scant attention to the needs of secondary school students. Senator JEFFORDS and I have been working extensively in this area. I commend him for his leadership and look forward to continued work with him on the needs of secondary students.

The bill before us supports model math and science partnerships between institutions of higher education and local school districts to improve the knowledge and teaching techniques of current and future math and science teachers. The math and science partnership provisions are based on proposals offered by the Administration, Senator FRIST, Senator ROBERTS, Senator ROCKEFELLER, and Senator BINGAMAN. They track a strong body of educational research that emphasizes the importance of training math and science teachers to improve student performance in those important subject areas.

This legislation supports institutions of higher education in increasing the number of students, particularly women and minorities, who study toward and obtain degrees in science, math, engineering, and technology. Senator LIEBERMAN, Senator MIKULSKI, and Senator BOND are leaders on this issue, and I commend them as well. We have an economic need and a national security imperative to increase the number and quality of students studying science, math, engineering, and technology at the post-secondary level.

Finally, the bill before us reforms NSF's program on major research and facilities equipment, to help prioritize projects and guard against cost overruns and approval of proposals that have not received adequate analysis. This is an area of concern for Senator CLINTON, Senator BOND, and Senator MIKULSKI, and I commend them for this initiative. Quality and merit should be the touchstones of our Nation's investment in the sciences.

The National Science Foundation Doubling Act is a thoughtful piece of bipartisan legislation that prepares us for the future. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Madam President, today, the Senate will pass legislation that authorizes the doubling of the National Science Foundation budget by fiscal year 2007. As you all know, NSF is the nation's premier federal science agency that invests in basic research across all disciplines. We rely on NSF research to open new frontiers of science, and I am proud that we can pass this important legislation today.

We have approached this legislation in concert with our friends on the Health, Labor, Education, and Pensions Committee, Senators KENNEDY and GREGG. Once again, it has been a pleasure to work with Chairman BOEHLERT and ranking member RALPH HALL of the House Science Committee. Obviously, we could not have produced this product without Senator MCCAIN, Senator ROCKEFELLER, and the other members of the Commerce Committee. We were also pleased to work with our friends, Senators BOND and MIKULSKI, who have been leaders on the NSF.

This doubling bill is vital. The Hart-Rudman Commission on National Security, and former speaker Newt Gingrich, warned that our failure to invest in science and to reform math and science education was the second biggest threat to our national security. NSF is well positioned to address this threat. After all, NSF invests in math and science education from kindergarten all the way through to the post-doctoral level and beyond. This bill allows the Foundation to increase that investment, while reaffirming our commitment to women, minorities, and people with disabilities. These under-represented groups, together, make up more than half of our nation's work force and are only increasing. Letting these groups fall by the wayside would not only threaten our economic competiveness, but also our national security.

It is often said that more than one-half of our nation's economic growth since World War I has stemmed from technology driven by science. Let me give just one example of how NSF's investments can spur our economy. NSF is the leading agency in the National Nanotechnology Initiative. Nanotechnology—which is the science of manipulating matter at the atomic and molecular level—will cut across every scientific discipline, including materials and manufacturing, healthcare and medicine, energy and the environment, agriculture, biotechnology, information technology, and national security. Worldwide, the market for nanotechnology is expected to be $1 trillion annually within 10 to 15 years. NSF's cross-disciplinary approach, which includes groundbreaking research into the way society and this new technology will interact, will help this nation take advantage of Nanotechnology sooner, better, and with greater confidence.

Finally, I want to note that NSF is responsible for the overall health and well-being of the research enterprise in this country. Congress is now completing its 5-year commitment to double funding for the National Institutes of Health. We made that investment because we want to cure and prevent disease. But increasingly, it's not just the biomedical research that NIH supports that brings us breakthroughs. Recent advances in biomedical science have relied on advances in fields such as computer science, physics, and chemistry. For example, the sequencing of the human genome was enabled by powerful computers networked in innovative ways. The commitment that we are making today to science at NSF will build our base knowledge in non-medical fields to complement the research done at NIH.

NSF research is not just for large universities. The Foundation's continued support for the EPSCoR program supports the development of the science and technology resources of individual states like South Carolina, through partnerships that involve the state's universities, industry, government, and the Federal research and development enterprise. These partnerships put researchers in these states in a better position to compete and win NSF grants.

Mr. President, I think these arguments are solid, simple, and straightforward. We can talk about NSF's past outstanding contributions to science. We can talk about the future and the importance of science and technology to our economy. But, Mr. President, where the rubber meets the road, we have to stop talking and invest, with real money, in the science and engineering enterprise that will guaranty the health, economic viability, and security of our future. I, for one, appreciate the hard work that NSF has done over the past 52 years promoting the progress of science, and I thank my Senate colleagues for supporting me in providing this agency the resources needed to conquer tomorrow.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Madam President, I am proud with my Senate colleagues, particularly Senators KENNEDY, GREGG, and HOLLINGS, in expressing support for this historic legislation, which will help ensure that our country continues to be a leader in scientific and technological innovation. I also want to extend my appreciation to Chairman BOEHLERT of the House Science Committee for his leadership in moving this strongly bipartisan legislation.

The reality is that technological and scientific innovation is now widely understood to be the major driver of economic growth, not to mention a critical factor in our military superiority. Education is essential to ensuring that the American workforce possesses the skills necessary to meet these innovation needs. The provisions included in this legislation will help give universities and colleges in Connecticut and nationwide the tools they need to boost our domestic pool of brainpower—the next generation of people who will incubate and implement the next generation of ideas to expand our economy.

I am extremely pleased that the bill passed today includes all of the key elements of the Technology Talent Act of 2001 S. 1549, legislation that I and my colleagues, most notably Senators MIKULSKI, BOND, FRIST and DOMENICI, first proposed a year ago today. The Technology Talent Act of 2001, "Tech Talent Act", sought to stimulate economic growth by boosting the number of math, science, technology and engineering graduates from U.S. institutions of higher learning. House Science Committee Chairman BOEHLERT introduced similar legislation in the House , H.R. 3130, on October 16, 2001.

In keeping with the Tech Talent Act, the National Science Foundation Act of 2002 "NSF Authorization Act approved today establishes a framework for a multi-year competitive grant program that would award performance-based grants to institutions of higher learning to increase the number of math, science, technology and engineering graduates. The legislation will formally authorize an existing program at NSF that was inspired by and modeled after Tech Talent Act—the Science, Mathematics, Engineering,and Technology talent Expansion Program, STEP. STEP, has already received Federal appropriations for fiscal year 2002 and elicited more than 170 applications from interested colleges and universities, of which 16 were awarded grants. I am pleased that Naugatuck Valley Community College in my home state was selected to be one of the first grantees under the program and have every confidence that it will lead the Nation in developing creative and effective ways to build a 21st century workforce.

The provisions in the NSP Authorization Act before us today achieves the same goals as were proposed in my Tech Talent Act. The following analysis describes the growing talent gap that threatens America's leadership in science and technology and clarifies the goals, concepts, and themes underpinning both my original legislation and the STEP, or Tech Talent, provisions of the NSF Authorization Act.

America's technological prowess is unequaled in the world today—which is why, despite our economic slowdown and the financial burdens of prosecuting the war against terror and ensuring our collective defense, we still have the strongest, most vibrant economy on the planet. However, our long-term competitive standing and economic security could well be at risk if we do not address a troubling trend line in our workforce, the mismatch between the demand and supply of workers with science and engineering training.

Studies show that the number of jobs requiring significant technical skills is projected to grow by more than 50 percent in the United States over the next ten years. But outside of the life sciences, the number of degrees awarded in science and engineering has been flat or declining. This has helped fuel a well-chronicled shortage of qualified New Economy workers.

We have tried to temporarily plug this human capital hole with a stopgap of foreign workers. Unfortunately, there is a broad consensus among high-tech leaders and policymakers that it would be a serious mistake to prolong this dependence and essentially render our GDP contingent on the supply of H–1 B visa holders.

That may sound like a bit of an overstatement to some. But the reality is that technological innovation has been a key enabler of our economic and military dominance over the last half century. It is widely acknowledged, moreover, that we cannot continue to expand our economy in the future if we don't take steps now to expand our domestic pool of human intellectual capital.

Now, most answers to serious economic challenges flow from the private sector, which is where growth must occur. But there are things that the Federal Government can do to help, particularly when it comes to educating and training our workforce. We can provide leadership, focus, and not least of all resources, and that was the purpose of the Tech Talent Act as introduced, and STEP as is included in this NSF legislation.

Specifically, the Tech Talent program aims to fix a critical link in this "tech talent" gap—undergraduate education in science, math, engineering, and technology. As established in our bill, it would provide competitive grants to institutions of higher learning, from universities to community colleges, to encourage them to find creative methods for increasing the number of graduates in these disciplines.

This is not another scholarship program, but a targeted, results-driven initiative that goes straight to the gatekeepers. We're not asking them to change their admissions policies, but, in effect, to design new missions. Come up with effective ideas, and we will provide the dollars to make them work.

For example, institutions could propose to add or strengthen the interdisciplinary components of undergraduate science education. Or they could establish targeted support programs for women and minorities, who are 54 percent of our total workforce, but only 22 percent of scientists and engineers, to increase enrollment and graduation numbers in these fields. Or they could partner with local technology companies to provide summer industry internships for ongoing research experience.

This initiative was conceived with strong bipartisan, bicameral support. The Tech Talent Act, as noted, was introduced last year by Senators MIKULSKI, BOND, FRIST, DOMENICI, and myself; the House companion bill, H.R. 3130, was introduced by House Science Committee Chairman BOEHLERT and Representative LARSON. By the end of the year, Congress had agreed to appropriate $5 million for this fiscal year to jumpstart the program in the form of NSF's STEP, even though our authorizing legislation had not yet been passed. Most recently, the Senate VA–HUD Committee Appropriations bill for fiscal year 2003 included $20 million for the program.

The program also has extremely broad support outside the Congress. The Administration has supported Tech Talent as a priority, including funding for it in its budget request for FY 2003. In addition, the response from leaders in industry, academia, and educational communities, also has been tremendous, we have received letters of support from TechNet, Semiconductor Industry Association, National Alliance of Business, K–12 Science, Mathematics, Engineering & Technology Coalition, American Association of State Colleges and Universities, Texas Instruments, and the American Society for Engineering Education, to name but a few.

Even more encouraging are the preliminary data obtained from NSF's STEP. NSF received 177 applications requesting a total of $59.7 million in aid, clear evidence of the vast interest in, and need for, the Tech Talent program among undergraduate institutions seeking to implement reforms in science and math education. In its first year, the program has awarded 16 grants to colleges and universities.

The NSF Authorization Act passed today will do much to enhance the efforts already underway at NSF in this area and to permanently establish "Tech Talent" as a national priority. I want to make clear the intent of a few provisions in this legislation as their implementation will be critical to the success of the program.

The intent of H.R. 4664, expressed in section (8)(a)(7)(A), is to prioritize funding for programs in fields of science, mathematics, engineering, and technology that have witnessed a period of stagnant of declining enrollment and degree conferrals, especially where such declines have resulted, or are likely to result, in adverse social, economic, technological, or military costs. It deserves clarification that a declining trend can be indicated not only through an absolute decrease in the number of students enrolling or graduating in a particular field, but through a relative decrease in the proportion that students of a particular field constitute relative to the total number of students enrolled or graduating across all fields.

For example, statistics from the National Science Foundation, NSF, demonstrate that between 1985 and 2000, the number of bachelor's degrees awarded declined from 77,572 to 59,536 in engineering, and from 16,270 to 14,580 in the physical sciences. Furthermore, the NSF predicts that the number of jobs requiring skills and backgrounds in information technology will vastly outstrip the number of people capable of filling such positions over the next decade. The negative consequences of such trends with respect to economic growth, technological innovation, and gainful employment have been widely documented and should represent near to medium-term priorities for Tech talent funding.

In emphasizing the need to remediate stagnant or declining trends, we recognize and appreciate previous criticisms regarding the difficulty of accurately modeling future employment scenarios and of forecasting areas of societal need. Nevertheless, we believe that investments must bear a relationship to desired outcomes if limited funds are to be allocated intelligently. The NSF is therefore expected to undertake efforts to the best extent it can to identify and account for broader social considerations, including generally anticipated industry requirements or imbalances between the number of students graduating across different fields, in determining fields appropriate for prioritization. To this end, the NSF may require applicants to specify the specific societal needs being addressed by their proposals and to articulate how such proposals would further the remediation of targeted needs.

The fundamental goal of the Technology Talent Act as introduced was to increase the number of graduates with expertise in math, science, technology and engineering to meet the critical needs of our U.S. businesses, industries, research community and military. As such, the intention of sections (8)(a)(7)(B) and (8)(a)(7)(D)(i) of H.R. 4664 is to require applicants to clearly establish measurable targets to both increase the number of students studying toward degrees in science, mathematics, technology and engineering, and to increase the number of students who have completed degrees, concentrations, or certificates in these fields. Therefore, it is intended that applicants that fail to establish goals for both enrollment and completion shall be considered inadequate.

Likewise under section (8)(a)(7)(D)(ii), it is intended that the Director shall terminate funding in the case of a grantee that has failed to make substantial progress toward meeting the targets established in section (8)(a)(7)(D)(i) for increasing the number of students completing degrees, concentrations or certificates in science, mathematics, technology and engineering. However, I would encourage the Director to work with grantees and provide technical assistance to help ensure that grantees make substantial progress during the first three years of the grant toward meeting the targets established in (8)(a)(7)(D)(i) and to achieve such targets by the end of the grant period. I further believe that it is inherent in this legislation that grantees that successfully meet their targets established in (8)(a)(7)(D)(i) shall be eligible to compete for subsequent grants.

I believe that this NSF bill provides a real boost to efforts that are being undertaken in parts of the country to address our technical workforce challenge. As such, it is the intention that innovative consortias between institutions of higher education and non-profits, industry or state or local governments are eligible to compete for grants under the STEP program per section (8)(a)(7)(F). In particular, I believe that legislation under (8)(a)(7)(F)(iii) allows for non-profits established on behalf of such high-quality and proven consortias to apply directly for grants.

For example, the State of Texas passed legislation last year that created a consortium—the Texas Engineering and Technical Consortium, TETC, among private industry and 32 colleges and universities to increase the number of students graduating from Texas schools with degrees in electrical engineering and computer science. Grants are awarded to universities and colleges to support curriculum changes, bridge programs, and various forms of student and faculty support to help increase the retention rate of students pursuing degrees in these areas and to attract and retain more underrepresented groups. This collaborative effort has received funding from Advance Micro Devices, Texas Instruments, Hewlett Packard, Motorola, Intel, Applied Materials and Sabre, with in-kind support from AeA and TechNet. The state matches private and other contributions up to $5 million per year.

In April, grants worth $5.3 million were awarded to fund 33 projects as 23 institutions. The appeal of this program is that industry, academia and the state are working cooperatively and collaboratively to address a pressing workforce need, rather than on a school-by-school or company-by-company basis. While it is still too early to determine the success of these projects, which were funded at 64 percent of the potential grant amount, the institutions are projecting a 13 percent increase in total student numbers in these programs for fall 2003. If fully funded, that increase could go as high as 23 percent. This is just the type of innovation that the Tech Talent is meant to encourage.

Finally, the real success the version of the "Tech Talent" program encompassed in this legislation will be based on the successful replication and expansion of model programs supported through this grant program at all of our higher education institutions. Therefore, I believe it is critical that the Director follow the intent of the original language as introduced in S. 1549, section (5)(a), and H.R. 3130, section (4)(d), and select an independent evaluative organization to develop metrics for measuring the impact of the program, particularly on the number of students enrolled, academic performance of students, persistence to degree completion, and placement in post-graduate education or career pathways, and to identify the program approaches assisted under this program that are the most effective in increasing the number of students obtaining degrees in science, mathematics, technology and engineering.

In addition, both S. 1549 and H.R. 3130 intend for the Director to regularly disseminate information on the activities conducted by grantees and the results of programs assisted under this grant program, including best practices, to participating institutions of higher education and other interested institutions of higher education. Similarly, I believe it is imperative to share the findings of programs assisted under STEP grants with Congress through interim and final reports so that we may make better policy decisions to enhance our nation's standing as a scientific and technological leader.

We all realize that solving the undergraduate problem is not going to single handedly close our talent gap. At the same time, we should also realize that the talent gap cannot be closed without first solving the problem at the undergraduate level. Therefore, I am pleased by the Senate's unanimous support today for the NSF Authorization Act of 2002, and the STEP, or Tech Talent, provisions encompassed therein. In doing so, we will be helping to ensure that the young minds of today will be capable of mastering and fueling the high-tech economies of tomorrow.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Madam President, I rise today to join with Senator KENNEDY, Senator HOLLINGS, Senator GREGG, Senator MCCAIN, and Senator BOND to urge passage of the National Science Foundation Doubling Act.

On July 12, 2002, Senator KIT BOND and I joined together and called on our Senate colleagues to join us in an effort to double the budget of the National Science Foundation over five years. We said at that time, that just as we worked collectively to double the NIH budget, now was the time for a parallel effort on behalf of the fundamental research supported by the NSF.

NSF's impact over the past half century has been monumental—especially in the field of medical technologies and research. The investments have also spawned not only new products, but entire new industries, such as biotechnology, the internet, and e-commerce. Medical technologies such as biotechnology, the internet, and e-commerce. Medical technologies such as magnetic resonance imaging, ultrasound, digital mammography and genomic mapping could not have occurred, and cannot now improve to the next level of proficiency, without underlying knowledge from NSF-supported work in biology, physics, chemistry, mathematics, engineering, and computer sciences.

Today, with this bill, we take an important step to ensure the well-being of this Nation and its citizens with passage of this bill to double the funding for the basic research and science education activities of the National Science Foundation over the next five years.

Some might ask, "Why should we do this now?" Let me try and answer that question.

We have seen some dramatic increases in research and development investments during the past decade, largely from industry. These investments have contributed to this country's standing as a global economic powerhouse.

However, according to the National Science Board—in its latest report on science indicators—developments abroad could affect U.S. preeminence in the years to come. The Board says that the United States finances 44 percent of the total worldwide investment in R&D—equal to the combined total of Japan, the United Kingdom, Canada, France, Germany and Italy.

But other nations are increasing their R&D investments and focusing on areas such as physical sciences and engineering, which receive comparably less funding in the United States. Those changes could lead to the creation of new centers for research excellence abroad, which will encourage many of those who have come here from other countries and have become a part of our science enterprise to return home.

The fact is that this country's future competitiveness rests on our ability to develop a U.S. work force that has the skills necessary to meet the increased competition coming from abroad.

In this country, R&D investments by U.S. industry have contributed to a steady stream of innovations and economic growth. We are seeing new partnerships develop that connect firms and universities, nonprofit organizations and government.

Meanwhile, the balance of R&D investments continues to shift. As industry R&D grew to nearly 75 percent of the national total by 2000, Federal expenditures remained essentially flat over the past decade.

At the same time federal research expenditures in life sciences have grown, from 41 to 47 percent of the federal total between 1990 and 2000. However, the combined share of physical sciences and engineering in federal research total dropped from 37 to 29 percent in the same period.

Changes in the U.S. economy have spilled into the workforce. Information- and technology-based changes in the economy have created new opportunities for highly trained workers.

Science and engineering occupational fields are growing faster than the overall growth of the American work force. the Bureau of Labor Statistics predicts that during this decade, hi-tech occupations will grow by 47 percent, compared to 15 percent for the labor force as a whole.

Despite many state and national reforms initiated during the last decade, the quality of mathematics and science education at the precollege level is not where it should be. America's high school students continue to lag behind in international achievement measures in science and mathematics. U.S. high school students taking physics lag behind students in Norway, Sweden, the Russian Federation, Denmark, Germany, Australia and seven other countries.

A persistent issue in science and mathematics education remains the size and adequacy of the teaching force. According to the National Commission on Mathematics and Science Teaching for the 21st Century, the nation's schools will need to hire 2.2 million teachers, including 240,000 middle and high school mathematics and science teachers, in the next decade.

The need for teachers is most pronounced in urban and rural areas and within specific disciplines and grade levels of mathematics and science. A survey of urban school districts, by the Council of the Great City Schools and Recruiting New Teachers, Inc., in 1998–99, indicated that up to 95 percent of our urban school districts had an immediate demand for high school science and mathematics teachers.

A high percentage of science and mathematics teachers lack even a minor in their teaching field, with 56 percent of public secondary students receiving instruction in the physical sciences from teachers without a major or minor in the physical sciences. And as many as 50 percent of new teachers in urban school districts leave the teaching profession within their first three years, further exacerbating shortages.

Solving the problem of producing more high-quality, homegrown scientists and engineers—and a well educated workforce—depends upon solving the math and science education problems we have at the elementary and secondary levels of our school system.

The bill before us today authorizes substantial growth in all areas of basic research—including the physical, engineering, biological, and computer sciences—fields vital for progress in just about every other area of science including biomedical research. The bill also puts a high priority on cutting edge programs such as information technology, nanotechnology and plant genome research.

Under this bill, the NSF budget would grow from today's level of $5 billion to nearly $10 billion by fiscal year 2007 which should allow for substantial growth in both the size of the average award as well increase the number of awards NSF is able to make. Increasing the size of the grants will benefit those currently conducting research. Increasing the number of awards should help those individuals who are just starting their careers in science as well as attract more women and minorities into our science and technology enterprise.

In the area of math and science education, the bill firmly establishes the President's Math and Science Partnership program at the National Science Foundation. This is a new effort designed to create strong connections between state and local school districts with our institutions of higher education.

This bill also includes a provision for a new undergraduate "tech talent" program. The "tech talent" program is designed to provide financial support to undergraduate students to pursue bachelor degrees in science and engineering—all in an effort to help meet today's and tomorrow's workforce needs.

The funding in this bill will also help increase the graduate student stipends in both the NSF fellowship programs as well as in the support graduate students receive as research assistants on the NSF research grants. Under this bill, NSF's entire education and human resources program would grow from $875 million in fiscal year 2002 to almost $1.8 billion by fiscal year 2007.

Finally, this bill includes two provisions that relate to the National Science Board. These are "good government" provisions that give the National Science Board, the policy making body of the Foundation, the authority and funding to hire its own staff. Our rationale is to ensure that the Board remains independent with respect to its policy making and oversight responsibilities. This is particularly important as Congress attempts to double the NSF over the next five years. Finally, it is equally important to know that these provisions do not preclude the Board and the NSF from continuing to work closely together as they have over the years such as in the staffing of NSB committees, subcommittees, and task forces and the development of the biennial Science and Engineering Indicators report.

As a Nation, we have a big challenge ahead of us as we enter the new millennium. Our world has changed and we must do what is necessary to meet the new challenges that will surely come our way. The sustained and effective investment in our Nation's research and education enterprise is one of the keys to meeting those challenges. I urge all my colleagues to join us in enacting this important investment in the future of our country.

NSF REAUTHORIZATION: NSF DOUBLING ACT

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I would be happy to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. I see that in this legislation, there is an authorization for the Plant Genome Project, a program that had previously been authorized only in appropriations acts.

Mr. KENNEDY. That is correct.

Mr. HARKIN. Is the intent of the mangers in including this provision merely to provide a permanent authorization for the Plant Genome Project, and not to state a preference by the Senate for plant genomics over other agricultural genomics programs when it comes to additional funding provided through appropriations?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is correct. That plant genomics language included in the NSF doubling legislations is only to establish an authorization, it does not state a preference for plant genomics over other agricultural genomics programs that might be provided through later appropriations acts.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator. I think that is an important point because Senator LUGAR and I worked hard in the Agricultural Research, Extension, and Education Reform Act of 1998 to authorize an agricultural genomics program administered by the National Science Foundation because we felt a balanced genomics program was essential to keeping U.S. agriculture productive and competitive.

While I think the plant genomics program is an excellent one, I sincerely hope that any further increases provided for agricultural genomics be open to animal and microbiological research as will, not just plants. We need a balanced portfolio of agricultural research to best capitalize on the resources devoted to agriculture-related genomics research. I would not want anyone to think that the Senate was now backtracking on the progress we made with the passage of the 1998 agricultural research legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is certainly not the manager's intent to limit the Agricultural, Research, Extension, and Education Reform Act of 1998.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator for that. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. REID. I understand Senators KENNEDY, GREGG, and HOLLINGS have a substitute amendment at the desk; I ask that that amendment be considered and agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; the bill, as amended, be read three times and passed; the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; the title amendment be agreed to; and any statements be printed in the RECORD with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4958) was agreed to.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of the Amendments.")

The bill (H.R. 4664), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

The amendment (No. 4959) was agreed to, as follows:

> Amend the title so as to read: "An Act to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, and 2007 for the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes.".

ORDERS FOR FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 2002

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business tonight, it stand in adjournment until tomorrow at 9:45 a.m. I further ask that on Friday, immediately following the prayer, the morning hour be deemed expired, the Journal of proceedings be approved to date, the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day, and there be a period of morning business until 10 a.m. with the time equally divided between the two leaders or their designee; and that at 10 a.m. the majority leader, Senator DASCHLE, or his designee be recognized.

Further, that the live quorum with respect to cloture motions filed with respect to the Homeland Security Act be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ARMED FORCES TAX FAIRNESS ACT OF 2002

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5557, which is now at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

> A bill (H.R. 5557) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a special rule for members of the uniformed services and Foreign Service in determining the exclusion of gain from the sale of a principal residence and to restore the tax exempt status of death gratuity payments to members of the uniformed services, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

TAX STATUS OF SERVICE PERSONNEL ON DIEGO GARCIA

Mr. BAUCUS. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Ms. LANDRIEU has raised an issue with respect to the legislation before us. That legislation, H.R. 5557, deals with tax benefits for military service personnel. Senator LANDRIEU would like clarification from the Administration on the status of service men and women on the Island of Diego Garcia. These service personnel have participated in military operations as part of Operation Enduring Freedom and will participate in future military operations from that location. There is a question whether these members of the armed forces are entitled to be treated in the same manner as if such services were in a combat zone.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Let me respond to the distinguished chairman on this point. At the request of the Senator from Louisiana, our staffs made inquiries of the administration on this question this evening. In discussion with Treasury officials, our staffs have been assured that the Treasury Department will look into this matter and work with the Senator from Louisiana to address the questions raised by the Senator. We look forward to an expeditious response from the Administration.

Mr. BAUCUS. I thank my good friend from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Madam President, I am pleased that we are passing the Armed Services Tax Fairness Act that will make a number of useful tax changes benefitting our military personnel including the National Guard and Reserve. It includes a provision that I introduced that broadens the allowable membership of veterans organizations so ancestors and descendants can be members. This will allow veterans organizations, particularly at the local chapter level to preserve as tax exempt a variety of their activities which otherwise would be subject to tax as the number of veterans who are members decline.

Unfortunately, because of opposition from the House, this measure does not include a provision passed by the Senate on an earlier version of the Armed Services Tax Fairness Act that I feel very strongly about. I introduced it earlier this year. It was companion to a measure introduced by Congressman RANGEL.

My bill blocks the ability of the very rich to reduce their taxes by renouncing their U.S. citizenship. The Joint Tax Committee has estimated that it will raise $656 million from a very few people who I call Benedict Arnolds. These are people who turn their back on their country which provided so well for them so they can avoid paying their fair share of U.S. taxes.

Under current law, there are special rules that apply to these former citizens that appear to recover funds lost to the Treasury. But, they are full of holes. Under the current regime, for 10 years after a U.S. citizen renounces his or her citizenship with a principal purpose of avoiding U.S. taxes, the person is taxed at the rates that would have applied had he or she remained a citizen. Actually the tax is nominally on a broader base of income and on more types of transactions. In addition, if the expatriate dies within 10 years of the expatriation, more types of assets are included in his or her estate. But, the reality is that taxes are very often not paid.

The reality is that once a person has expatriated and removed U.S. assets from U.S. jurisdiction, it is extremely difficult to enforce the current rules, particularly for an entire decade after the citizenship is renounced. The measure I introduced simply provides that the very act of renouncing ones citizenship triggers the recognition of tax. So, rather than collecting tax every time an asset is sold over the next decade, my bill treats all of the assets of an expatriate as having been sold the day prior to when the person renounces their citizenship. The taxes are due up front rather than over time. In regard to estate taxes, rather than attempting to collect the tax from the estate of an expatriate not in U.S. jurisdiction, my measure taxes the inheritance of an heir remaining in the U.S. in such a way as to remove any tax benefit from the renouncement of citizenship.

Madam President, $656 million in revenue from these very few former citizens is a lot of revenue that must be made up by loyal Americans or in higher debt that Americans will face. I intend to reintroduce my measure at the beginning of the next Congress and will be working hard for its passage at the earliest possible point.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the Baucus amendment at the desk be agreed to, the bill be read three times and passed, the motion to reconsider be laid on the table, and any statements be printed in the RECORD, with no intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 4961) was agreed to.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of the Amendments.")

The bill (H.R. 5557), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

PROGRAM

Mr. REID. Madam President, I announce that a motion to proceed to the terrorism insurance conference report is possible at about 10 a.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:45 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. REID. Madam President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 10:46 p.m., adjourned until Friday, November 15, 2002, at 9:45 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, November 14, 2002

The House met at 1 p.m.

The Chaplain, the Reverend Daniel P. Coughlin, offered the following prayer:

Lord, our Protector and our Shield, wrap the Members of Congress in Your mantle of justice. Guide them in their judgments and in all their ways.

One of the great tasks You lay upon this body is "to provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States."

Knowing this is an awesome responsibility, be a buttress to their efforts to secure this Nation in peace and protect its people and institutions from all harm.

In and with all efforts to be ever vigilant and prepared, we know it is "in You we are to place all our trust;" for "unless the Lord guard the city in vain does the watchman keep vigil" .

Shower upon this Nation Your loving care now and forever.

Amen.

level of family-sponsored immigrants under section 201(c)(1)(A) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

SEC. 2. ELIGIBILITY FOR CITIZENSHIP.

For purposes of section 320 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, So Hyun Jun shall be considered to have satisfied the requirements applicable to adopted children under section 101(b)(1) of such Act.

Mr. MCCRERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3758, a private bill for the relief of So Hyun Jun (So Young June). This is a no-cost, no-controversy bill that will provide needed relief to my constituents John and Ok Sun Thornton of Leesville, Louisiana who adopted So Hyun in 2001.

So Hyun was born in South Korea on September 16, 1984 to Mrs. Thornton's sister. A car accident in 1999 left her parents incapable of caring for her. At that time, Mrs. Thornton and her husband were contacted about the possibility of taking custody of So Hyun. While visiting her family in Korea, Mrs. Thornton had occasion to see first-hand the hardships suffered by her niece. The Thorntons immediately agreed to bring her to the United States.

In February 2000, So Hyun arrived in Louisiana to live with her aunt and uncle. Mrs. Thornton traveled with So Hyun back to Korea during the summer of 2000 to collect her birth certificate and other important papers. It was during this trip that Mrs. Thornton's sister and her husband agreed to relinquish their parental rights, thus giving full custody to Mr. and Mrs. Thornton. Formal adoption proceedings were begun in August of 2000 and finalized in Louisiana State Court on March 6, 2001.

The Thorntons were careful to work with the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) to ensure that So Hyun's move to the United States went smoothly. Mr. Thornton contacted the INS a month prior to So Hyun's arrival to inquire about the procedure for bringing her to the United States. He was told the best method would be to bring her over on a tourist visa and then file the necessary forms to complete the adoption process. During this time, Mr. Thornton was misinformed three times about the correct form to complete. In January of 2001, Mr. Thornton once again called the INS Service Center with a question about the immigration forms, as So Hyun's visa was soon expiring. He was told that there was no need to renew the visa since they were adopting the child. However, upon the adoption's finalization, the INS Adjudication Office informed the Thorntons that So Hyun's visa could not be renewed, nor could she qualify for permanent resident status, as her adoption was not finalized by her sixteenth birthday. She missed that deadline by only seven months. And this comment from the INS was the very first mention of an age requirement.

While the Immigration and Naturalization Service may not extend permanent resident status to Miss Jun, she is eligible for private relief because her adoption was begun before she turned sixteen. Without this relief, Miss Jun risks deportation to Korea where no one is legally bound to care for her. Private relief is needed to help this adopted girl remain in the United States with her new family.

I want to thank Chairmen SENSENBRENNER and GEKAS along with Ranking Members JOHN CONYERS and SHEILA JACKSON-LEE for their assistance in securing passage of H.R. 3758. I hope the Senate will follow the House's lead today by passing this private relief bill before the end of the 107th Congress.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This concludes the call of the Private Calendar.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1214, MARITIME TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ACT OF 2002

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 605 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 605

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (S. 1214) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to establish a program to ensure greater security for United States seaports, and for other purposes. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it was my hope, I had actually assigned this rule for management to my colleague from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART), and I have his prepared statement here, and I will go through his prepared statement, Mr. Speaker. I love Florida, and it is a great spot. My family actually has a home there, but I am a Californian; so I am just offering that as a bit of a warning as I proceed with the statement of the gentleman from Florida's (Mr. DIAZ-BALART).

During the consideration of the resolution, all time yielded will be for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 605 is a standard rule waiving all points of order against the conference report to accompany the Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002 and against its consideration.

The underlying legislation is yet another integral part of our coordinated effort to provide the most effective and comprehensive homeland security plan possible. We are working to protect our citizens at home and abroad, we are working to protect our vital infrastructure, both physical and electronic, and we are working to improve our economic security. Today we will vote to protect our Nation's ports.

Our maritime industry, including hundreds of ports nationwide, contributes $742 billion to the gross domestic product each year. The State of Florida has some of the largest ports in the country, and I should say I represent the Los Angeles area, which has the Ports of Long Beach and Los Angeles, which are even larger than the ones in Florida I should add. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) represents the Port of Miami and Port Everglades. Thousands of passenger and container ships pass through these ports every year. Industries from retail sales to the airline industries are effected by the business that is done at these ports in both my State and in the State of Florida and around the country.

We must ensure that these ports are not only safeguarded from being used as a point of entry for dangerous elements, but also to protect them from an attack that could be devastating to our economy. The Port of Miami's impact on Miami-Dade County is estimated at more than $8 billion and 45,000 jobs. In fiscal year 2001, the volume of cargo moving through the Port of Miami exceeded 8.2 million tons. Port Everglades' volume of business is equally impressive. In 2001, Port Everglades was host to over 3 million cruise passengers.

Our Nation's ports are significant partners in the U.S. economy and we must employ every conceivable option to protect them. This conference report will work to this end by requiring the Coast Guard to conduct vulnerability assessments of our ports, authorizing grants to help with port security upgrades around the country, and by assessing the security systems of certain foreign ports that do business with the United States.

Additionally, this legislation authorizes $6 billion for the Coast Guard in fiscal year 2003, including $550 million in additional resources to address long-standing budget shortfalls. The Coast Guard is charged with the tremendous duty of protecting our 95,000 miles of coastline. This legislation very appropriately addresses this reality.

I would like to thank the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), as well as the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO), for their work on this very important issue. This is truly a bipartisan piece of legislation. In fact, every member of the conference committee has signed the report.

The conference report and the fair rule providing for its consideration deserve our support, and I would urge my colleagues to do this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield control of the balance of my time to the gentleman from Miami (Mr. DIAZ-BALART), who has arrived, and I know that he could have commented on Florida in a much better way than I, but I struggled to get through representation of his State if only on a temporary basis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Florida will control the time.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Rules for yielding me time and I thank my colleague and neighbor from Florida for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, this important legislation helps ensure the security of our Nation's ports by establishing a comprehensive national antiterrorism system to reduce the vulnerability of ports and waterways against a terrorist attack and a transportation security incident. Additionally, the conference report authorizes funding for these new antiterrorism fighting provisions as well as the planning and implementation of security plans and response efforts at all of our Nation's ports.

It authorizes additional funding to the Coast Guard which is much needed, and it establishes a nationwide security ID program for all U.S. ports. Perhaps most importantly, the report outlines the responsibilities of various Federal agencies, local law enforcement, and private companies in the day-to-day security operations of ports in the case of any unforeseen event.

Following September 11, as a member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and Committee on Rules, I was and remain an outspoken critic of the lack of coordination between Federal agencies in times of crises. I am happy to see that the conference had the foresight and wherewithal to provide guidance to the many agencies affected by increased port security. Perhaps our airports and the Transportation Security Administration could learn a few things from this report.

Mr. Speaker, it is fitting that I find myself managing this rule with the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART). I think the gentleman would agree that there is no region in the country that is home to three major international ports in such close proximity as South Florida. And the rest of Florida, if we take into consideration the Tampa Bay area, the Pensacola Bay area, Jacksonville and Port Canaveral, then Florida obviously is critical when it comes to port security.

Further, there are no ports that have done more security improvements in the last 18 months than Port Everglades, the Port of Palm Beach and the Port of Miami, all three of which are located in the counties the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) and I represent.

While the underlying report is good, it would be irresponsible of me to continue without noting two of the major flaws I believe still exist in the legislation.

First, ports who had planned for or implemented new security measures prior to September 11, 2001, that bring the port into compliance with provisions of S. 1214 should be able to be reimbursed for their expenses. The underlying report does not allow for this to occur.

Case in point, Port Everglades. As one of the largest cruise ships and container ports in the Nation, Port Everglades recognized the need to improve its security long before September 11, 2001. Nearly 2 years ago, the port invested millions of dollars into establishing a new security plan. In fact, in June of 1999, the Presidential Commission on Seaport Crime and Security visited Port Everglades and recognized many of the port's "best practices" as examples for ports throughout the country to follow.

Prior to September 11, the Port Everglades security improvement plan was to be implemented over several years. However, in response to September 11, Broward County, Florida, made security at Port Everglades its top priority. The County is committed to spending more than $25 million for security improvements at the port in fiscal year 2003 alone, and the Ports of Palm Beach and Miami have similar investments in progress.

Under the report, Port Everglades will be able to be reimbursed for the security improvements it has made since September 11, as well as those it will make in the following year. However, I am appalled that Port Everglades, as well as the Ports of Palm Beach and Miami, will not be eligible to be reimbursed for the planning and implementation of various security improvements that they made prior to September 11, 2001. South Florida's three major ports and some others around the Nation were ahead of the game and made security improvements 18 months ago that Congress is just now getting around to requiring today.

Specifically, Port Everglades is an example of the intuitive thinking that ports should have been doing a long time ago, and to penalize it for being ahead of the game is just plain wrong.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I have major reservations about the level of funding authorized in the report. Clearly, the amount authorized is not enough to meet the security needs of our Nation's ports. In the next 18 months, South Florida's three international ports will spend more than $60 million on security improvements. Under the 50/50 or 75/25 cost-sharing agreements laid out in the report, Port Everglades, Port Palm Beach and Port of Miami could easily command nearly half of the total amount authorized in this legislation.

Realistically, the $75 million authorized in the report just is not enough to fund security improvements for all U.S. ports. I encourage my colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations to consider this reality when appropriating funds over the next 6 years.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, this rule is typical of one for a conference report, and I will be supporting it. Additionally, I will also be supporting the underlying conference report. I urge my colleagues to do the same, but, as I previously mentioned, the report has flaws and Congress must remain intent on revisiting these issues that are critical to our Nation's security.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) as well as the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER) for having initiated this discussion today on this very important rule.

I think it is important that we realize that the conference report before us is a very important piece of legislation. I know of few pieces of legislation that have ever been flawless that I have voted on, and so I would simply tell my friend that perhaps this piece of legislation could be improved as well, as any human endeavor, because I have seen some things that are perfectible but very few that are perfect.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, would the gentleman from Florida agree that Port Everglades and Port Miami are deserving of consideration?

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Of course.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. And that the funding level, although we have problems in the Nation, may not be enough to cover the ports of the United States?

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the gentleman. In the House bill before it went to conference we had a provision for reimbursement for ports for acts taken for security after September 11, and in the Senate there was no such provision. The inclusion of the House provision is something we should commend. We should keep in mind there are important provisions in this legislation which I think make it not only a conference report that we should support but that we should support with pride and enthusiasm.

I thank the conferees and all of the Members who have worked so hard to bring this important piece of legislation forward, specifically the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), as well as the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) for their work on this critical issue of port security. This is a fundamental aspect of national security, of homeland security, to improve the protections for our ports that are obviously so important to our economy.

Mr. Speaker, with that of mind, cognizant of the importance of the underlying legislation and the fairness of this rule, I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

The motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3210, TERRORISM RISK PROTECTION ACT

Mr. SESSION. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 607 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 607

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 3210) to ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution is the standard rule for consideration of conference reports and waives all points of order against consideration of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, 2001, the collective memories of Americans were altered forever. The terrorist attacks resulted in an incalculable loss, both in loss of life and the destruction of buildings and businesses.

While America has begun its recovery and is healing from last September, we must be mindful of the threat that continues to exist. Just yesterday, our intelligence officials indicated that terrorist groups may be planning a new wave of attacks against our homeland. Exposure to terrorism is not only a threat to our national security but is also a threat to the U.S. and the global economy.

There is no doubt that these terrorist attacks have resulted in the most costly, catastrophic loss in the history of property and casualty insurance. However, the ripple effects of the attacks continues to last and will linger on.

The shortage of terrorism insurance has left any number of our hospitals, stadiums, shopping malls, apartments, and office buildings either with astronomical rates for insurance or none at all.

It goes without saying that the attacks have been a real threat not only to our homeland but also to our economic security. The United States Chamber of Commerce estimates that the economy has suffered a loss of more than $15 billion and 300,000 jobs in the construction industry alone.

Mr. Speaker, insurance has been described as the glue which holds our economy together. Without reinsurance for the risk of terrorism, some insurance companies have been forced to specifically exclude it from their future policies. Without this terrorism coverage, lenders are unlikely to underwrite loans for major projects. This sequence of events could result in dangerous disruptions to the marketplace and further hurt our economy.

In April of this year, a Washington Post article cited two real-life examples. One, J.W. "Bill" Marriott, chairman and chief executive officer of Marriott International, said that although the hotel company remained insured for terrorism, he was expecting a 300 percent increase in premiums when it had to renew its new policies.

Another example was from Baylor University, which is located in Waco, Texas. According to David Brooks, vice president for finance and administration at Baylor University, the University had to go to 23 insurance companies searching for terrorism coverage.

These snapshots from around the country form a composite picture of a dire situation that requires action from this body, the United States Congress.

Heeding President Bush's call for Congress to act, the House passed H.R. 3210, the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, shortly after the September 11, 2001, attacks. The Terrorism Risk Protection Act provides a Federal backstop for financial losses in the event of future terrorism attacks.

□ 1330

This bill establishes a system of shared public/private compensation for insured losses resulting from acts of terrorism to protect consumers and create a transitional period for the private insurance markets to stabilize.

The Federal backstop is triggered when the Secretary of the Treasury determines that an act of terrorism has occurred with losses in excess of $5 million. The Federal Government would pay 90 percent of the insured losses that exceeded the insured deductibility, which increases each year of the program, up to $100 billion each year.

The conference report provides for full payback protection for the American taxpayer by guaranteeing that the first 10- to $15 billion in losses would be paid by the insurance marketplace. The Secretary would retain the authority to fully recoup any additional costs as necessary.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues are fully aware, much of the recent attention has been focused on the tort provisions in this bill. The Joint Economic Committee released a study this May that estimated that lawsuits stemming from the September 11 attacks were already estimated to cost as much as $20 billion. These lawsuits typically pay 33 to 40 percent of the award to the plaintiff's lawyers.

The 1993 World Trade Center bombing, which killed six people, resulted in 500 lawsuits by 700 individuals, businesses and insurance companies. Mr. Speaker, it has now been 8 years and the cases are only now just getting to the trial stage, where hundreds of plaintiffs have yet to even receive one cent of compensation. Mr. Speaker, this is not a circumstance or a situation that we want to repeat.

Though this bill does not solve the woes of our legal system, it does take the first solid steps towards reform. By providing reasonable reforms, victims of terrorism will more quickly and equitably receive compensation while also reducing the substantial uncertainty facing the insurance industry when pricing terrorism risk.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to commend the conferees who have labored to produce this fine work. I would also like to recognize the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), who has been so instrumental in the success of this critically important bill. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support me in not only supporting this rule but also the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague from Texas for yielding me the customary 30 minutes and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the tragic events of September 11, 2001, will remain fresh in our minds for years to come. The shroud of terrorism continues to surround us and terrorists around the world continue to regroup, plan and carry out attacks on innocent civilians. The economic consequences of another terrorist attack on the United States are real and, without proper preparation, could be economically devastating.

After September 11, there was no question whether the insurance industry needed financial backing in case of another terrorist attack on the United States. We all agreed that another attack could potentially cripple the American economy. In response, the Committee on Financial Services produced a truly bipartisan bill that was approved unanimously by the full committee. It was not perfect, there were real disagreements over specific provisions in the original risk insurance bill, but it was a good start.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the majority leadership decided it had to meddle in the process and inserted language drastically changing the tort system in this country. The original bill was made worse and in the process bipartisanship was thrown aside.

Mr. Speaker, this conference gets us back to the land of bipartisanship. All the Democratic conferees signed the conference report and, after initially threatening to veto it, the White House is now indicating that the President will sign the bill into law.

My concern is with the unnecessary delay here. This bill should have been completed last year. Without the tort language in the original House-passed bill, a conference report could have been easily agreed to and, with hard work, this bill might have been signed into law before the first of the year. By making this a political process rather than the truly bipartisan process it should have been and it started out to be, the majority showed us that they will bend over backward for special interests, especially before an election. Thankfully the other body was able to stand up to these special interests and, a year later, the result is a good bipartisan bill.

Mr. Speaker, I support this rule and I support this conference report which, as I said in the beginning, represents a bipartisan compromise. I would urge my colleagues to support the rule and support the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the chairman of the Committee on Financial Services.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the gentleman from Texas for his usual excellent work as a member of the Committee on Rules that handles legislation coming from the Committee on Financial Services. I do rise in support of the rule. The efforts that the committee and the entire Congress made in antiterrorism legislation clearly is one of the most important bills that will pass the Congress this year.

It is no secret that after 9/11, the reinsurance industry, which is mostly offshore, indicated they would no longer write terrorism insurance. Since they are the insurers of the insurers, it meant that the domestic-based insurance companies were unable to spread their risk and as a result we have a crisis in insurance coverage for terrorism. That crisis has evidenced itself in many ways, not the least of which is a recent study that indicated over $15 billion in valuable projects are on hold, not going forward, because of the lack of terrorism insurance; and because they cannot get terrorism insurance, they cannot get lending for those projects.

We are not just talking, Mr. Speaker, about New York City. I was recently in Chicago. There is a major project going on in Chicago that is simply now just a hole in the ground that will employ several hundred people. The President has indicated that their studies indicate some 300,000 jobs are at stake in the construction industry, the realtors, lenders and the like. So in many, many ways this is an economic issue and a jobs issue. That is why the President has been so outspoken in virtually every opportunity that he has had asking the Congress for this important legislation. I suspect that the President has mentioned this issue perhaps more than any other issue in my memory and about the only time that he did not make a public statement about terrorism insurance was at the United Nations. But overall this issue, this crisis in insurance coverage, has been a major factor, I suggest, in the slowdown of the economy.

The Secretary of the Treasury was quoted as saying that it could very well knock 1 percent off our gross domestic product. That is a significant amount. We are fortunate today because we stand on the threshold of passing this important legislation that the President will willingly and gladly sign.

Let me just talk about the key elements briefly of this bill. The conference report provides full payback protection for American taxpayers, guaranteeing that the first 10- to $15 billion in losses will be paid by the insurance marketplace with the Secretary fully able to recoup any additional amounts necessary. This was a critical component in the House bill that Chairman BAKER and I and others insisted upon, that if the taxpayers were going to be involved in this backup, it is important that those tax dollars be repaid. Even though it was not in the Senate version, we prevailed in the conference. It is important to point that out to my colleagues in the House.

Secondly, we have incorporated a transition period that provides immediate full commercial terrorism coverage for all American business consumers while long-term contracts under the bill are being negotiated; in other words, an immediate start at getting these projects up and running and 300,000 people back to work.

Three, the Federal backstop has been simplified and requires that insurers have to pay a sizable deductible before they are eligible for the Federal backstop. This deductible is increased from 7 to 15 percent of their premiums over the program to phase out the taxpayer exposure and foster the reemergence of a private insurance market for terrorism. It insures that only truly catastrophic events trigger any Federal involvement while continuing to provide equal protection for small and rural insurers.

Fourth, we have provided more disclosures and information to consumers, with more options to insure that terrorism coverage is available in all commercial policies.

In addition, we continue to provide strong penalties to punish insurers who defraud the government. State insurance and reinsurance programs can be fully covered by the Treasury Secretary to provide equivalent protections for Americans who are unable to obtain insurance in the private markets. And we continue to give victims of terrorist attacks the ability to enforce court judgments against terrorists' assets.

Finally, while I would note that the legal protections may not be as strong as I or others would desire, they are all improvements over existing law and are very similar to those strongly approved in the Committee on Financial Services over 1 year ago.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report is timely and critical for America. We need it to protect jobs, protect our economy and protect the American people against future terrorist attacks. I urge all of our colleagues and friends to support the rule.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, what we are doing today is simply a part of both responding to the terrorist attacks of September 11 and defending our country from continuing damage from those terrorist attacks. It is a very prudent thing that we do today. It is a part of the defense of our homeland and of our economy, for if our economy continues to be weakened by the terrorist attack, then the terrorists win. The President has called on us repeatedly to respond with legislation.

I commend this House. This House has passed, and passed last November, good legislation to address the problem. And what is the problem? Mr. Speaker, before the terrorist attack, normally, as a matter of course, protection against terrorist attacks was included in commercial property and casualty insurance policies. After the losses on September 11, which amounted to 40- or $50 billion, it was impossible for insurance companies to predict when and if and the extent of these terrorist attacks in the future. It is impossible for us as a government to predict when and where and to what extent these attacks will occur. So there is no way for the insurance companies to assess that damage and to make reserves and charge premiums in an adequate amount.

So what have the insurance companies done? They have done two things. They have either in most cases not extended coverage or, two, they have simply picked a very high number for a premium and extended coverage at a very substantial amount for what, in all probability, will not occur at a specific location because of the actions that this government and this administration has taken since September 11. However, because terrorist insurance coverage has not been extended, billions of dollars of projects have been put on hold or canceled. In fact, a recent, and this is very recent, real estate group estimated that the lack of affordable terrorist insurance has resulted in the delaying or the cancellation of more than $15.5 billion worth of new commercial building projects just in the past few months. The Federal Reserve, in fact, Chairman Greenspan recently said that as a result of terrorist insurance coverage not being provided, not being available, it is producing as much as a 1 percent drag on our gross domestic product.

We talk about percentages of 1 percent. We talk about figures of $20 or $15 billion. What we are really talking about here is layoffs. We are talking about construction workers not working. We are talking about buildings not being built. We are talking about employees who work for companies that supply the office furniture for those buildings, who supply the goods that were to be sold in those buildings, the equipment in those buildings not being sold. As the President said, we have to respond comprehensively to what happened September 11. Thus, this bill.

Let us talk about the liability provisions of this bill, because there was in fact an unwillingness on the part of some to endorse this legislation simply because of what was proposed.

What is proposed here today is that, in the event of a large-scale terrorist attack upon this country in any location, one Federal court, one jurisdiction will take control and be charged with the administration of handling all the claims as a result of that attack, instead of having State and Federal courts all over the United States handling thousands of claims. Instead of that situation, which I think we all agree would be unmanageable, one Federal court picked for the convenience of those who had been hurt by this terrorist attack and picked for the efficient handling of the claims would be picked within 90 days of the terrorist attack, a Federal cause of action.

The lawsuits under this legislation would be tried in Federal court, Federal rules of procedure. However, the substantive law of the State or where the attack occurred would be the applicable law.

Finally, there has been a lot said about punitive damages. I for one have contended, and this bill makes it very clear, that punitive damages are not insured losses. Let me repeat that. Punitive damages are not insured losses. The taxpayers will not have to pay punitive damages under this legislation, and that is very important because the people that will be responsible for these attacks that ought to be punished will be the terrorists, not the American people.

All the legal reforms, as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) said, are an improvement over the current law. The Federal Government of the American taxpayers will not be forced to reinsure any punitive damage claims. Private rights of action for punitive damages are unchanged.

In conclusion, let me simply commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), chairman, and the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER), chairman of the subcommittee, who have worked long and hard on this. I urge all Members of this conference, let us get on with strengthening our country, recovering from the attack of September 11 and doing everything we can do to prepare for other attacks, hoping they will not occur, but we have to act in self-defense.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I inquire about the time remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) has 10½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) has 27½ minutes.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule, it is the standard rule for conference reports, but also in opposition to the conference report itself because it fails to include critical liability protections for victims of terrorism, which are particularly important because the conference report creates a Federal indemnification program that puts the American taxpayer on the hook for damages caused by terrorists.

It is important to note what the trial lawyers did first to mark the first anniversary of the terrorist attacks on September 11. They are suing American companies that were victims of terrorist attacks themselves. According to the Washington Post: "Things really are returning to normal a year after the terrorist attacks. Trial lawyers—surprise!—are headed back to the courthouse, [and] there is a rush by lawyers to sue airport operators, airlines, security companies, the builders of the World Trade Center and others."

Let us face the facts. Terrorist-inspired litigation is not a garden variety tort case. A banana peel is an accident waiting to happen, but a terrorist is a suicidal fanatic bent upon killing individuals, innocent people, and causing mass destruction of property. Even the most diligent property owners cannot always guard against such attacks.

To protect innocent Americans, the provisions in the terrorism insurance legislation the House passed a year ago provided that, in a lawsuit for damages arising out of a terrorist attack, no punitive damages would be allowed against victims of terrorism. The bill before us today fails to include that basic protection; and, in doing so, it fails to ensure that Americans do not become the victims of terrorists twice: first during the initial wave of death and destruction caused by the terrorists and second by the legal aftershocks caused by the unquantifiable and unpredictable damage claims brought by the plaintiffs' bar.

While the bill before us today excludes punitive damages awarded in court from insured losses paid by the United States taxpayer, the mere allegation of punitive damages always boosts the settlement value of the cases, and this bill leaves U.S. taxpayers paying the inflated costs of those cases settled out of court. So what the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS), my friend, said, he is right, we taxpayers do not pay punitive damages, but knowing that there is a punitive damage award hovering over there means that the settlement value which is paid by the taxpayers ends up costing the taxpayers' money. So it requires the American taxpayers to engage in an egregious form of national self-flagellation. American taxpayers are punished for the evil acts of foreign enemies.

Even the Washington Post's editorial page has stated: "On insurance, the Democrats are objecting to Republican proposals to ban punitive damages in the event of terrorist attacks, which seems a reasonable proposal. The Democratic position on terrorism insurance smacks of the trial bar, which never saw a disaster that didn't justify a lawsuit."

And just a few weeks ago, the Washington Post stated that "the Democrats should indeed be embarrassed" by their efforts to defend lawyers at the expense of the American economy.

It is no surprise to me that all Democratic conferees signed this conference report.

The terrorism insurance bill the House passed last year also provided the defendants could only be liable for the amount of damages for pain and suffering in direct proportion to the defendant's percentage of responsibility for harm. That provision allows Americans who are victims of terrorists to rely, at the very least, on their own innocence to protect them from liability. My colleagues may remember that in the No Child Left Behind Act, which overwhelmingly passed both the House and the Senate, the very same rule was applied to protect teachers. If that provision is good enough for teachers, it should be good enough for victims of terrorism.

The bill that the House passed last year also provided that fees for attorneys suing victims of terrorism could not be greater than 20 percent of the damages awarded or any amount of the settlement received. That provision is simply a continuation of the longstanding Federal policy behind the Federal Tort Claims Act, namely that lawyers should not profit excessively when they are paid from the United States Treasury.

Especially today, in a time of war, excessive lawyer fees drawn from the U.S. Treasury should not be allowed to result in egregious war profiteering at the expense of victims, jobs, and businesses; and this bill, unfortunately, will allow this one segment of our society to legally, with the blessing of the United States Congress, engage in war profiteering.

This conference report does not include these protections for the victims of terrorism that were in the bill the House passed a year ago. It gives the plaintiffs' bar the keys to the United States Treasury, and it gives lawyers a license to further prey on the victims of terrorism.

We passed a compensation program the week after 9/11 for the survivors of the victims of those attacks, and some of the proceedings that have gone on under that law have resulted in embarrassment to the public and to the authors of that act and grist for investigative reporters. Should, God forbid, there be another terrorist attack and the provisions of this bill come into play, that same embarrassment will apply. There is an old adage "Fool me once, shame on you; fool me twice, shame on me." Let us not shame us by passing this bill. It should be voted down.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to take this opportunity to commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the chairman; and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), ranking member; and all the members of the Committee on Financial Services for all of their work on this issue. As I said in my opening remarks, they initially came up with an okay bill that, unfortunately, as a result of some meddling from the majority leadership, turned into a very bad bill in my opinion.

What we have before us today in this conference report is a bill that represents bipartisan concerns and deserves bipartisan support, and I would urge my colleagues to support this rule, and I would urge my colleagues to support final passage of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting this rule and of course the underlying legislation which is so critically important not only to this country but to the economy of this country for consumers and for men and women who own businesses and have money invested in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 58 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. HANSEN) at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p.m.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 333, BANKRUPTCY ABUSE PREVENTION AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 606 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 606

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 333) to amend title 11, United States Code, and for other purposes. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution provides the standard rule under which we consider conference reports and waives all points of order against the conference report and its consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I am exceedingly pleased that today we will finally consider the conference report for much-needed bankruptcy reform legislation. I am proud of the tireless efforts of many of the staff members and the Members who have put countless hours towards the passage of this important legislation. Their efforts allow each of us to ensure that our bankruptcy laws operate fairly, efficiently, and free of abuse. We must end the days when debtors who are able to repay some portion of their debts are allowed to game the system. This bill is crafted to ensure the debtor's rights to a fresh start while protecting the system from flagrant abuses by those who are able to pay their bills. The result is a carefully crafted package that balances and protects Americans from all walks of life and provides access to bankruptcy for all Americans who have a legitimate need.

I urge my colleagues to support this rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report and urge my colleagues to support this rule so that the House may proceed to the consideration of the conference agreement. The House has, in the past two Congresses, consistently supported bankruptcy reform. In the 107th Congress, the House passed its version of the bill by a vote of 306 to 108. This agreement, which is the product of months of negotiations, makes sensible changes in the law that will save American consumers millions of dollars a year. This conference agreement adheres to the principle that if an individual has the capacity to repay a substantial portion of their debt, then that debtor should have an obligation to repay. This conference agreement will rein in abuse of the system and ensure that those debtors who cannot pay are given the fresh start they need.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the conferees for their hard work on this issue and for bringing the House a conference report that is worthy of support.

I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that there are Members on our side of the aisle who strongly object to this conference report, and we will be hearing from them in the course of this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank my friend for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this rule. Some of my colleagues were not here back in 1993 and 1994 when we debated the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act, which penalized pro-lifers in a way that was totally unfair and discriminatory, mandating ruinous lawsuits, criminal penalties and the like, for doing the same thing that some other nonviolent civil disobedient person might do. If you stood in front of an abortion clinic, you could have the book literally thrown at you, and do the same thing in front of NIH or somewhere else and have a whole different set of penalties. Today we are dealing with the same thing but an extension of that very, very wrongheaded and misguided piece of legislation.

In 1994, Chairman Sensenbrenner said this about the same language we are debating today:

"Political protest has been at the forefront of social change. From the Boston Tea Party to the abolitionist movement, from the antiwar protests to the activism of the civil rights movement, civil disobedience has been an intimate part of our history. This is perhaps the first time in our Nation's history"—this is the second, today—"that those in the power have so openly sought to use the authority of government to broadly suppress the legitimate actions of a movement with which they do not agree. The legislation, FACE," which this makes it worse, you cannot discharge a civil complaint that has been brought against you, the penalty, "sweeps with broad and heavy hand to target peaceful, nonviolent, constitutionally protected activities on the same terms as violent or forceful acts."

Chairman Sensenbrenner had it right then. He went on to say that this was McCarthyism. What we are dealing with today, with all due respect, is McCarthyism. Much has been made about the Starr memo. Let me say this: The difference is if you are from PETA or some other organization where sit-ins and civil, nonviolent disobedience, where you get arrested, is part of the intent of what you want to do to bring a focus, and Martin Luther King certainly had intent when he protested and got arrested more than a dozen times or so. The fundamental issue here is that pro-lifers are treated differently. Under the FACE bill, ruinous lawsuits, extreme penalties are leveled against nonviolent protestors.

I urge a no on the rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BOUCHER).

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding me this time. I am pleased to rise in support of the rule for consideration in the House of the conference report to accompany the bankruptcy reform legislation. I urge approval both of the rule and of the conference report.

The reform of the Nation's bankruptcy laws, which our actions today will accomplish, is well justified. This reform is strongly in the interest of consumers. It will significantly reduce the annual hidden tax of approximately $400 that the typical consumer pays because others are misusing the bankruptcy laws. That amount represents the increased cost of credit and the increased price of consumer goods and services occasioned by bankruptcy law misuse. This reform will lower that hidden tax.

The reform also helps consumers by requiring clearer disclosures of the cost of credit on credit card statements. And the reform will be a major benefit to single parents who receive alimony or child support. That person today is fifth in priority for the receipt of payment under the bankruptcy laws. The reform before us today elevates the spouse-support recipient to number one in priority.

This reform proceeds from a basic premise that people who can afford to repay a substantial part of the debt that they owe should do so. The bill requires that repayment while allowing the discharge in bankruptcy of the debts that cannot be repaid and in so doing responds to the broad misuse of chapter 7's complete liquidation provisions that we have observed in recent years.

The reform measure sets a threshold for the use of chapter 7. Debtors who can make little or no repayment can use its provisions without limitation and can discharge all of their debts. Debtors whose annual income is below the national mean of about $50,000 per year are also untouched by the provisions of this reform. They can make full use of chapter 7 and discharge all of their debts even if they could afford to make a substantial debt repayment.

And so, Mr. Speaker, the financially unfortunate and middle-income consumers are not affected at all by this reform. They can continue to use the bankruptcy laws as they can under current law. But upper-income consumers who can make substantial repayments will be expected to enter into court-supervised repayment plans under chapter 13. This modest requirement of personal financial responsibility is appropriate, and I am pleased today to urge approval of this well-justified reform which is contained within the conference agreement.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to urge approval of the rule that brings that conference agreement to the floor as well as the conference agreement itself.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I want to rise in opposition to this rule and make it clear that I support bankruptcy reform laws very much. But not this version, not with these words that have been inserted by the conference. They did take the reference to the FACE Act, standing for Free Access to Clinic Entrances, meaning an abortion clinic, that was passed in 1994; and we have the FACE language here in white and the identical words are in the bankruptcy reform bill. They did change "reproductive health services" to "lawful goods or services." That is the one change. The key words are "interferes with" or "physical obstruction." Under FACE, peaceful pro-life protesters are being arrested and sentenced to jail for just praying on a sidewalk outside an abortion clinic, or handing a leaflet to a woman as an alternative. One man was even successfully sued for leaving his business card on the clinic's door.

Mr. Speaker, under FACE, people are being fined hundreds of thousands of dollars. What we are doing in this bill is taking the identical language and putting it in the bankruptcy bill so now they cannot even file for bankruptcy, unfair bankruptcy. So we are condemning peaceful, innocent people who have a conscience to protest just to try to save the life of an unborn to a life of financial ruin.

I have a couple of letters, one from Harvard law professor Mary Ann Glendon, a good analysis of the bill, but let me just read the last paragraph:

"A large and nondischargeable debt, beyond one's capacity to pay, especially in the hands of a hostile and motivated creditor, is a financial death sentence. That is what even peaceful pro-life protesters have to fear if the proposed language is added to the existing aggressive judicial interpretation of FACE and similar laws."

Mr. Speaker, I will submit the other letter from the Catholic Bishops for the RECORD.

HARVARD LAW SCHOOL,
Cambridge, MA, November 12, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER SMITH,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN SMITH: I am taking the liberty of writing to you today because I am deeply concerned about the application of H.R. 333 to peaceful pro-life protestors. I hope the following opinion letter will be helpful to you.

The proposed legislation would create a new 11 U.S.C. §523(a)(20), denying discharge for and judgments under the Freedom of Access of Clinic Entrances Act, 18 U.S.C. §248 (2000), or under similar state laws, or under injunctions restricting protest at abortion clinics.

The impact of the provision on peaceful pro-life protestors would be grave. Existing law substantially restricts protest at abortion clinics, and in their zeal to eliminate violent protests and obstruction protests, courts and legislators have forbidden much protest that is peaceful and nonobstructive. Proposed §523(a)(20) would add an additional sanction to all this existing law: money judgments for abortions protest would follow protestors to the ends of their lives. No matter their financial circumstances, no matter the size of the judgment or the nature of the protest, these judgments could never be discharged in bankruptcy.

1. THE FREEDOM OF ACCESS TO CLINIC ENTRANCES ACT (FACE)

Proposed §523(a)(20)(A) precisely tracks the key substantive language of FACE. FACE prohibits conduct that: "by force or threat of force or by physical obstruction, intentionally injuries, intimidates or interferes with" access to "reproductive health services," or attempts to do so. 18 U.S.C. §248(a)(1) (2000).

Proposed §523(a)(20) denies discharge for any judgment arising from actions of the debtor that: "by force or threat of force or by physical obstruction, intentionally injure, intimidate, or interfere with" access to lawful goods or services. The key language in the two block quotes is obviously identical save for the difference between singular and plural verbs ("whoever" is the subject in FACE; the debtor's "actions" is the subject in proposed §523(a)(2)).

Because the proposed language is substantively identical to FACE, it will be read in light of existing decisions under FACE. Existing interpretations of FACE will almost certainly be read into §523(a)(20). Worse, abortion clinics and their supports will likely argue that by re-enacting the same statutory language, Congress has approved existing decisions and thus confirmed their status as valid and appropriate interpretations of FACE itself. This is a critical point, because existing interpretations of FACE in the lower courts, extraordinarily favorable to the abortion clinics and their supporters, have not yet been accepted or rejected by the Supreme Court of the United States. Congressional passage of proposed §523(a)(20) could figure prominently in eventual Supreme Court arguments on the interpretation of FACE, lending plausible support to the worst interpretations of the statute.

I will not consider in this opinion letter the interpretations of "force or threat of force," "intentionally injure," or "intimidate." Some interpretations of those provisions have been surprisingly expansive, but those forms of protest are not the issue for most protestors. The real work of FACE, and of proposed §523(a)(20), is in the provisions that target anyone who "by physical obstruction * * * interferes with * * * or attempt to * * * interfere with" access to a clinic. Each of these terms has been construed or defined to mean more than first appears. No actual interference, and no actual physical obstruction is required for a violation. Courts have found violations in peaceful protest that did not actually prevent access to clinics.

"Physical obstruction" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §248(e)(4) to mean making ingress or egress "impassable * * * or unreasonably difficult or hazardous." What is "unreasonably difficult" has, in the lower federal courts, sometimes turned out to be remote from physical obstruction.

Thus in, United States v. Mahoney, 247 F.3d 270 (D.C. Cir. 2001), the court found physical obstruction and interference with access from a single protestor kneeling in prayer outside a locked door to an abortion clinic. Id. at 283–84. The door was a "rarely used" emergency exit. The court said that someone might have used the door, and that the law does not distinguish frequently and infrequently used doors. More remarkable still, the court held that a single person keeling in prayer rendered use of that door "unreasonably difficult" and forced patients to use a different entrance. Id. at 284.

Mahoney also held that six other defendants physically obstructed and interfered with access to another door. The court of appeals' entire discussion of this holding is that five protestors "knelt or sat within five feet of the front door," that the sixth defendant "was pacing just behind them," and that they "offered passive resistance and had to be carried away." Id. at 283. The court does not even say whether they were arrayed across the sidewalk or along the sidewalk, whether they left a passage open, or any other fact that might go to a plain meaning understanding of "physical obstruction" or to preserving a reasonable right to protest. It was enough for a violation that they were near the door.

Both FACE and proposed §523(a)(20) are limited to "intentional" violations, but mahoney shows that protection to be illusory. The court found specific intent to interfere with access to the clinic, even in the case of the lone protestor praying before the locked door. It relied on the fact that the protestor prayed that women approaching the clinic would change their minds about getting an abortion; the court quoted his prayer as evidence of criminal intent. 247 F.3d at 283–84. To similar effect is United States v. Gregg, 32 F. Supp. 2d 151, 157 (D.N.J. 1998), aff'd 226 F.3d 253 (3d Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 971 (2001). Gregg had much more evidence of actual obstruction than Mahoney. Even so, the Gregg court relied on defendants' "anti-abortion statements, including imploring women not to go into the clinic or not to kill their babies," and on the fact that defendants "carried anti-abortion signs," as evidence of forbidden intent. The government in these cases has offered evidence of opposition to abortion as evidence of specific intent to obstruct access, and the courts have relied on this evidence for that purpose. Clinics and their supporters would of course argue that Congress has codified these holdings if it enacts proposed §523(a)(20).

Courts have emphasized that FACE plaintiffs need not prove actual obstruction. "It is not necessary to show that a clinic was shut down, that people could not get into a clinic at all for a period of time, or that anyone was actually denied medical services." People v. Kraeger, 160 F.Supp. 2d 360, 373 (N.D.N.Y. 2001). Plaintiffs need not "show that any particular person was interfered with by the defendants' obstruction." United States v. Wilson, 2 F. Supp. 2d 1170, 1171 n.1 (E.D. Wis.), aff'd as United States v. Balint, 201 F.3d 928 (7th Cir. 2000).

To sum up, proposed §523(a)(20) would reenact statutory language that has been interpreted not to require actual obstruction, has been interpreted to prohibit a single protestor kneeling in prayer near an unused exit, and has been interpreted to treat antiabortion statements as evidence of criminal intent. These interpretations would almost certainly be read into §523(a)(20), and there would be a serious argument that Congress had confirmed these interpretations in FACE itself.

2. INJUNCTIONS

Proposed §523(a)(20)(B) makes nondischargeable any debt arising from violation of an "injunction that protects access to" a facility that provides lawful goods or services. Nothing in proposed §523(a)(20)(B) even purports to confine this subsection to violent or obstructive protest.

Under FACE and under other sources of law, courts have issued injunctions establishing buffer zones and bubble zones, forbidding protestors from coming within stated distances of the property line of abortion clinics or within stated distances of persons approaching abortion clinics. In Madsen v. Women's Health Center, Inc., 512 U.S. 753 (1994), the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of an injunction forbidding protestors to step onto clinic property, or onto public property within 36 feet of the clinic's property line. The effect was to confine protestors to the other side of the street. The Court also affirmed an injunction against making any noise audible within the clinic. In Schenck v. Pro-Choice Network, 519 U.S. 357 (1997), the Court upheld an injunction against any defendant "demonstrating within fifteen feet" of any doorway or driveway at any abortion clinic in the Western District of New York. The injunction in that case also prohibited any defendant from "trespassing" on any clinic's parking lot. (The injunction is set out id. at 366 n.2.)

Since Madsen, the lower courts have become more aggressive about issuing buffer zone injunctions without first attempting to control alleged obstruction with less intrusive means. Examples include the buffer zone injunction issued on remand after the limited violations in United States v. Mahoney, under the case name United States v. Alaw, 180 F. Supp. 2d 197 (D.D.C. 2002), and the preliminary injunction confining a single protestor to the other side of the street in United States v. McMillan, 946 F. Supp. 1254 (S.D. Miss. 1995).

Many forms of protest inside such buffer zones would not obstruct or interfere with anything. A single picketer with a pro-life sign, held in contempt of court for standing quietly inside a buffer zone, would be covered by proposed §523(a)(20)(B), and any fines, compensation, or attorneys' fees awarded would be nondischargeable. The protection for peaceful protest in proposed §523(a)(20)(B) is supposed to come from the clause excluding protest protected by the First Amendment. But given Madsen and Schenck, this protection means little; much protest that is peaceful and nonobstructive is not protected by current interpretations of the First Amendment.

3. STATE LAWS

Proposed §523(a)(20)(A) also denies discharge for judgments arising from violation of state laws protecting access to clinics if the violation includes actions that by "force or threat of force or by physical obstruction, intentionally injure, intimidate, or interfere with" clinic access, or attempt to do so. Certainly this includes statutes like the New York Clinic Access and Anti-Stalking Act, which substantially tracks FACE. (This law is codified as N.Y. Penal Law §§240.70 and 240.71 (McKinney Supp. 2002), and N.Y. Civil Rights Law §79-m (McKinney Supp. 2002)).

It will be a matter of interpretation and litigation whether §523(a)(20)(A) denies discharge for other state laws imposing more expansive restrictions on pro-life protest. For example, in Hill v. Colorado, 530 U.S. 703 (2000), the Supreme Court upheld Colo. Rev. Stat. §18-9-122(3) (West 1999), which makes it illegal to approach within eight feet of another person without that person's consent, for any form of "protest, education, or counseling" within one hundred feet of the entrance to a health care facility. The Court relied in part on the state's interest in "unimpeded access to health care facilities." 530 U.S. at 715.

Now consider a pro-life protestor who approaches a person outside an abortion clinic and offers a leaflet. Plainly this protestor would be violating the statutory eight-foot bubble zone. The statute currently authorizes compensatory damages for this violation, Colo. Rev. Stat. §18-9-122(6) (West 1999) and Colo. Rev. Stat. §13-21-106.7 (West 1997), and it could easily be amended to add liquidated damages or civil penalties on the model of FACE. In discharge litigation under proposed §523(a)(20), abortion clinics and their supporters would argue that the statute was a reasonable prophylactic means to prevent physical obstruction that interferes with clinic access, and that any violation of the statute amounts to such physical obstruction and interference. Prospective patients would prefer to enter the clinic without being offered a leaflet, and they may think the proffer of the leaflet made their entrance unreasonably difficult. If any of these arguments were accepted, judgments for violating state bubble-zone statutes would be nondischargeable under proposed §523(a)(20).

I do not think that would be a correct interpretation of proposed §523(a)(20). But after examining judicial interpretations of FACE, I think there is a substantial risk that some courts would reach this interpretation. If judgments for violating buffer-zone and bubble-zone injunctions are nondischargeable, it would likely seem a small step to hold that judgments for violating bubble-zone statutes are also nondischargeable..

4. THE MAGNITUDE AND NATURE OF THE JUDGMENTS AT ISSUE

Proposed §523(a)(20) is not confined to compensatory damages. The statutes at issue authorize punitive damages, liquidated statutory damages, civil penalties, attorneys' fees, expert witness fees, and criminal fines. Their purpose is to deter and punish, not just—or even principally—to compensate for any harm done. In fact, awards of actual compensatory damages are quite rare. The plaintiffs' preference for liquidated damages and penalties is most important in those cases in which there is no obstruction in the ordinary meaning of the word, or only brief and marginal obstruction. In such cases, there is little or no actual damage, but there still be can substantial monetary judgments.

FACE authorizes $5,000 per violation in statutory damages, at the election of plaintiffs, either private or governmental. 18 U.S.C. §248(c)(1)(B) (2000). In actions by the United States or by any State, it authorizes a civil penalty of $10,000 per protestor for the first non-violent physical obstruction, and $15,000 per protestor for each subsequent non-violent physical obstruction. 18 U.S.C. §§248(c)(2)(B) and 248(c)(3)(B) (2000).

The lower federal courts have held that the statutory damages are per violation, not per protestor. So if ten people combine to block a clinic entrance, a single judgment of $5,000 in statutory damages (plus costs and attorneys' fees) may be entered jointly and severally against them. United State v. Gregg, 226 F.3d 253, 257–60 (3d Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 971 (2001).

But this "per violation" protection does not prevent multiple awards for multiple violations, and each alleged act of interference may be parsed as a separate violation. Moreover, civil penalties may be awarded against each protestor, and civil penalties and statutory damages may be awarded in the same case for the same violation. Thus a federal court has entered $80,200 in judgments against four members of a single family, for ten separate violations, none of them violent and none of them creating anything like an effective "blockade" of the clinic. People v. Kraeger, 160 F. Supp. 2d 360, 377–80 (N.D.N.Y. 2001). And of course there is no federal limit on the damage and penalty provisions that states might enact for judgments that would be nondischargeable under §523(a)(20).

5. THE EFFECT OF WITHHOLDING DISCHARGE

I am not an expert on bankruptcy law or debtor-creditor law, and I have not done extensive research on the options available to the protestor with a nondischargeable judgment beyond his capacity to pay. But the basics are clear enough to anyone with credit cards and a mortgage. If you are unable to pay, the creditors first threatens your credit rating, then your possessions; eventually, if there is enough at stake, the creditor sends the sheriff to seize your possessions. If you are unable to pay and unable to discharge the debt in bankruptcy, the threats and seizures would never end.

For the rest of his life, the protestor subject to a nondischargeable judgment would find it difficult or impossible to get credit. He could not get a mortgage; he could not get a loan for a new car. The creditor might be an abortion clinic motivated to make examples of pro-life protestors; such a creditor could make vigorous and continuing efforts to collect for as long as the protestor lived. In most states, the protestor's home could be seized, his wages could be garnished, his financial accounts could be emptied. In some states, even his furniture could be seized. All or part of everything the protestor ever earned or acquired for the rest of his life could be seized by the abortion clinic creditor, until and unless the judgment was paid in full, with interest.

A large and nondischargeable debt, beyond one's capacity to pay, especially in the hands of a hostile and motivated creditor, is a financial death sentence. That is what even peaceful pro-life protestors have to fear if proposed §523(a)(20) is added to the existing aggressive judicial interpretation of FACE and similar laws. I believe that any more optimistic interpretation of the bill is wishful thinking.

Very truly yours,

Mary Ann Glendon,

Dear Member of Congress:

Disagreements have arisen in Congress over the conference report on the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act, particularly over Section 330 on the dischargeability of debts arising from sit-ins at abortion clinics. A legal analysis of this provision by our Office of General Counsel is enclosed. Based on this analysis, we have a serious concern about the form in which the bankruptcy bill is being presented for final passage.

The bishops' conference has always strongly condemned any resort to violence in the pro-life struggle. We have never endorsed, or taken a position on, the practice of conducting sit-ins or other forms of nonviolent civil disobedience at abortion clinics. However, we have strongly opposed the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act (FACE) as a discriminatory and ideologically motivated attack on the rights of peaceful pro-life demonstrators. The current language on protesters in the bankruptcy bill closely parallels the language of FACE, and will be used to impose another layer of penalties upon protesters whose only offense was to place their bodies in the path of those who take innocent children's lives.

The discriminatory nature of this provision seems clear. It could be used to take away the savings, homes and other property of low- or middle-income peaceful protesters to pay fines and the attorneys' fees of their opponents—a form of punishment now reserved chiefly for those who are guilty of inflicting willful and malicious injury upon others. This penalty would apply even if the protesters caused no harm to person or property but only "interfered" with abortions.

We hope the House will reject the Rule on the Conference Report so this unfair and discriminatory provision can be removed.

Sincerely,

Gail Quinn,
Executive Director.

Office of the General Counsel,
Washington, DC, September 12, 2002.

MEMORANDUM

We have been asked for an analysis of the Schumer amendment to the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act, H.R. 333.

SUMMARY

Under existing law, a pro-life demonstrator seeking bankruptcy protection may not discharge a debt for a judgment arising from injuries he or she intentionally causes. The Schumer amendment would expand the law by preventing a demonstrator from discharging a debt (a) based on lesser degrees of cupability, i.e., when the debtor did not intend or cause injury to person or property, and (b) when the demonstrator, regardless of his or her state of mind, commits a second violation of a court order protecting a clinic, even if the violation was not intended to, and did not, interfere with clinical access.

An exception in the amendment for expressive conduct protected from legal prohibition by the First Amendment does not change this analysis. Obviously, with or without the exception, Congress lacks the power to prohibit by the First Amendment does not change this analysis. Obviously, with or without the exception, Congress lacks the power to prohibit conduct protected from prohibition by the First Amendment.

The amendment is not limited to violent or even criminal conduct. For reasons discussed below, it seems likely that the amendment will have a disproportinate impact on pro-life demonstrators.

ANALYSIS

Among the debts that may not be discharged in bankruptcy is any debt "for willful and malicious injury by the debtor to another entity or to the property of another entity." 11 U.S.C.§523(a)(6). The word "willful" in section 523(a)(6) "modifies the word 'injury,' indicating that nondischargeability takes a deliberate or intentional injury, not merely a deliberate or intentional act that leads to injury." Kawaauhau v. Geiger, 523 U.S. 57, 61 (1998) (original emphasis). "[D]ebts arising from recklessly or negligently inflicted injuries do not fall within the compass of §523(a)(6)." Id. at 64. Debts arising from actions that cause no injury at all are likewise outside the scope of section 523(a)(6).

Section 523(a)(6) bars the discharge of debts resulting from judgments against pro-life activists arising from deliberate or intentional injuries that they cause. In re Treshman, 258 B.R. 613 (Bankr. D. Md. 2001) (debt for intentional injury resulting from violation of Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act was not dischargeable in bankruptcy); In re Bray, 256 B.R. 708 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000) (debt for intentional injury resulting from violation of FACE was not dischargeable in bankruptcy); In re Behn, 242 B.R. 229 (Bankr. W.D. N.Y. 1999) (debt for intentinal injury resulting from pro-life demonstrator's violation of temporary restraining order was not dischargeable in bankruptcy). There is some authority that an injury is ipso facto intentional when it results from violation of a court order directed specifically at the particular debtor, Behn, 242 B.R. at 238, but the same court left "to another day the question of the applicability of §523(a)(6) in other fact patterns, such as if there had been no court order directed specifically at the debtor, and instead the debt arose out of a judgement for trespass or menacing." Id. at 239 n. 6. Criminal trepass statutes generally do not require injury in the sense of actual damage to property or an intent to cause such damage; unauthorized entry or remaining unlawfully on property is usually sufficient. See 75 Am.Jur.2d Trespass §164.

The Schumer amendment can be divided into three parts. It prevents the discharge in bankrupty of any debt from a judgment, order, consence order, decree, or settlement agreement arising from—

(1) The debtors violation of any Federal or States resulting from intentional actions of the debtor that by force, threat of force, or physical obstruction, does any of the following—

Intentionally injures any person;

Intentionally intimidates any person;

Intentionally interferes with any person;

Attempts to injure, intimidate, or interfere with any person for any of the following reasons—

Because that person is or has been obtaining or providing lawful goods or services;

To intimidate that person from obtaining or providing lawful goods or services; or

To intimidate any other person or class of persons from obtaining or providing lawful goods or services.

(2) the debtor's violation of any Federal or State statute resulting from intentional actions of the debtor that—

Intentionally damage or destroy the property of a facility because it provides lawful goods or services, or

Attempts to damage or destroy the property of a facility because it provides lawful goods or services.

(3) a violation of a court order protecting access to a facility or person that provides lawful goods or services, or that protects the provision of such goods or services, if—

The violation is intentional or knowing, or

The violation occurs after a court has found that the debtor previously violated such a court order, or any other court order protecting access to the facility or person.

The Schumer amendment does not require an intentional injury. Parts 1 and 2, dealing with violation of federal or state law, require only an intentional act. The phrase "intentionally injure, intimidate, or interfere with" does not require intentional injury because the word "or" is used. Part 3 requires only an intentional or knowing violation of a court order, or a second violation of a court order, intended or not. The amendment would therefore expand existing law by stripping pro-life demonstrators of bankruptcy protection for injuries they did not intend, or only attempted but did not cause. Indeed, the amendment does not even require any injury in the sense of actual damage to person or property: It would remove bankruptcy protection in cases where there is neither damage to person or property nor any intent or attempt to cause such damage.

The amendment is not limited to violent crime. Physical obstruction or violation of a court order is sufficient to trigger the amendment. No crime is necessary, only violation of some federal or state statute (not necessarily a criminal statute) or court order.

It seems likely that the amendment will have a disproportionate impact on pro-life demonstrators and be invoked most frequently against them. Though broader in its current form, the amendment is based on FACE and substantially tracks it. For the most part, other federal crimes are not implicated. The amendment uses the phrase "physical obstruction," for example, which appears nowhere in the federal criminal code except in FACE. Words like "intimidate" appear elsewhere in the code, but usually not in reference to the receipt or provision of goods or services. Most federal crimes do not carry a civil remedy; FACE does. Thus, the Schumer amendment is carefully designed to impact demonstrators. There may be other instances in which the amendment would be theoretically applicable (e.g., environmental protestors who disrupt logging operations), but abortion seems the most common instance in which the targets of protest regularly allege interference with their business and often seek large judgments against their adversaries.

The amendment seems unfair not only because it has the practical effect of singling out demonstrators, but because those demonstrators, like others, are presently subject to the nondischargeability of debts for intentional injuries. Present exceptions to dischargeability for particular crimes generally involve intentional financial wrongdoing or conduct in which the debtor created a grave and unjustifiable risk to human life. Had Congress intended to remove bankruptcy protection for debt from some broader category of injury or conduct, it is unclear why that penalty should assume a form, as this amendment does, that in practical terms will be used only or primarily to deprive demonstrators, not others, of bankruptcy protection—unless, of course, the intent were to punish or chill speech, which is constitutionally impermissible.

To say that a demonstrator can avoid the problem by not violating an order or statute misses the point. The point is not to absolve unlawful conduct, but to fashion criminal and bankruptcy penalties that are proportionate to the gravity of the offense and the degree of injury and culpability—precisely what the law has traditionally done when assessing penalties. A minor or technical violation of a trespass statute resulting in no actual harm to person or property would hardly seem the sort of conduct that should trigger the severe nondischargeability penalty that this amendment would impose.

Perhaps even more significant is the risk that the amendment will chill lawful conduct. The amendment includes an exception for expressive conduct protected from legal prohibition by the First Amendment, but that does not change what the bill does or its likely chilling effect on protesters. Congress already lacks the power to prohibit conduct that is protected from prohibition by the First Amendment, and no bill can change that, yet anecdotally we hear of instances in which people decline to participate in legitimate pro-life demonstrations because of concerns about liability. Those concerns are not exaggerated give present misuse of the federal racketeering statute. People should not have to fear putting their assets at risk simply by doing what the Constitution permits. The amendment, in my view, is likely to heighten that fear and further deter legitimate and lawful protest.

MICHAEL F. MOSES,
Associate General Counsel.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to this rule. For my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who have profound concerns about this bill, I hope that you will realize that the crucial vote will be on the rule, not the bill. Because the rule is where it will have real effect.

There are many reasons to oppose this bill. This bill is opposed by almost all bankruptcy professionals, people who know anything about bankruptcy. It is opposed by organized labor, by almost every women's group, by children's advocates, by every consumer group, by civil rights organizations, and by most bankruptcy scholars. It is supported and is being pressed forward by a coalition of banks, credit card companies and other business interests who want to profit exorbitantly at the expense of families and small businesses at a time of crisis.

It is shocking that at a time when the American people are rightly outraged at the illegal and unethical machinations of many in corporate America, at a time when thousands of Americans are losing their jobs, at a time when many businesses large and small are in bankruptcy trying to stay alive and reorganize and preserve jobs, it is shocking that we would even be considering this kind of a special interest bill that will enrich lenders at the expense of families, jobs and small businesses and will force many businesses into liquidation and job destruction instead of reorganization and survival. Whatever Members may have thought of this legislation in the past, I hope they will take a very careful look at the bill we have before us today and think about what has happened since this bill was first proposed 5 years ago and since it was really debated on the floor at great length and people may have made up their minds.

We know that the lenders who have been demanding this bill, the big credit card companies and the big banks, are highly profitable. They are making big money off our constituents with high interest rates that have not come down with drops in bankruptcy or the prime rate. The prime rate is the lowest it has ever been. Have credit card interest rates come down?

My colleague from the State of Virginia says that there is a hidden tax of $400 per family because of deadbeats who do not pay. That is nonsense. What he is really saying is that the credit card companies would lower their interest rates if this bill passed. The prime rate has gone down by 8 or 9 points. Have the credit card companies lowered their interest rates? Credit card companies will never lower their interest rates because it is an oligopolistic business and they gouge from the people what they can gouge.

We know that many large banks have played a role in some of the more egregious financial scandals that have robbed workers and investors of their life's savings and their jobs. We know that this bill which serves their interests and their interests only will make it easier for these same large institutions to squeeze small debtors even more, to squeeze small businesses even more, to place outrageous and undue pressure on people to give up their right to a fresh start, and to make even larger profits at the expense of the most vulnerable.

We know that the millionaires exemption, the unlimited homestead exemption in six States, will not be changed, will not be capped. The bill will only limit that outrageous loophole that allows one to put all of one's money into one's mansion, go bankrupt, and still have $10 million in the mansion, and this bill will limit that only if a wealthy debtor manages to get found guilty of a specific type of fraud or of a limited number of crimes or the most extreme torts resulting in serious physical injury or death. It does nothing, let me say that again, this bill does nothing about a multimillionaire who wants to shield millions of dollars in assets from creditors in a mansion, whether those creditors are small businesses or other lenders or in some cases the taxpayers. But the small debtor, him we will get.

What this bill will do is squeeze the more than 1½ million Americans who each year get in over their heads and need to reorder their finances, pay off as much of their debts as they can and then start over. These small debtors, the ones who do not have huge mansions in Texas or Florida, will be squeezed beyond the breaking point by the draconian provisions of this bill.

Let me repeat that statistic. Last year there were a million and a half individual bankruptcies. The proponents of this bill will tell us that that is a sign that we need to change the system and allow the banks and the credit card companies to squeeze families even harder so fewer people will go into bankruptcy. But there is another way to look at this. These million and a half Americans every year who file for bankruptcy are not crooks. Ninety percent of the people who filed for bankruptcy did it either because they were laid off from their job, they got divorced, or they had a medical emergency. They are in bankruptcy because they lost jobs, because Congress failed to enact an adequate national health care insurance program, because Congress failed to provide a prescription drug benefit program, because people lost their retirement savings because they invested in Enron, because Congress allowed their unemployment insurance to run out, because Congress voted to ship their jobs overseas, or for a variety of other misfortunes. Yet our answer to them is not to give them a helping hand in crises but to make things even harder for them. Is that what we are going to offer them? Is that going to be our answer? That is unconscionable.

The so-called means test in this bill would hold people to what the IRS says they would need to live on even if their actual expenses are higher. That test was so draconian that Congress told the IRS they should not use it on tax cheats, but now we are going to let the big credit card companies do what we have told the IRS it cannot do.

This bill would require the courts to assume that the income of a family in bankruptcy is what it received in the 6 months preceding the bankruptcy filing. So if someone got laid off, if they are 55 years old and got laid off from their $75,000-a-year middle management job at IBM and will never make $75,000 again, it does not matter. Their income must be assumed to be $75,000 even though they are now only making $25,000. It does not matter what the future holds. If someone once made $75,000, they will forever make $75,000 says the income test that is in this bill, and the judge has no discretion about that. It ignores the facts in reality. Many people in this economic climate will be in bankruptcy precisely because they lost the jobs that used to pay them a good income. Even still, if a family in crisis is found to be able on the basis of this ridiculous means test to pay as little as $100 a month for the next 5 years, they will be denied chapter 7 relief. They will be branded by the law as abusers of the bankruptcy system.

We will be told that this bill does not affect families with incomes below the median income. That is not true. Read the bill. It still allows landlords to evict people below the median income more easily. It still allows creditors to bring abusive and coercive motions against people below the median income more easily. It still exempts many creditors from the application of the bankruptcy rule that prohibits abusive and coercive motions even against people below the median income. It still makes it harder to save the family car in bankruptcy, and it will make it easier to force many small businesses into liquidation and thus cost jobs instead of allowing those businesses to reorganize and survive. If my colleagues think this will not hurt families at all income levels, I have a few bridges I want to sell them.

I want to remind my colleagues that chapter 7 is no walk in the park. It requires a debtor to liquidate all his or her assets and repay as much of their debts as they can. A secured loan such as a home and a car must still be paid off or the debtor loses the property. Bankruptcy never relieves one of that obligation, and the bankruptcy stays in their credit report for years and impacts their ability to borrow money in the future and their ability to get a job or rent an apartment. Even a debtor witness called by supporters of this bill complained that she had these problems after she filed for chapter 7.

And the bill rewrites chapter 13. Even though two-thirds of the people who voluntarily go into chapter 13 and had promised to repay a portion of their debts failed to do so. They cannot make the goals of the plan. This will throw millions of people into chapter 13 involuntarily, and because it will be written the way it is written, we will have many, many debtors who are judged too rich for chapter 7 but they cannot meet the requirements of the bill for chapter 13. They do not have enough money under the means test; so they are too poor for chapter 13. Too rich for chapter 7, too poor for chapter 13. They cannot get any relief. They cannot go bankrupt. That is absurd.

The bill will make it harder for businesses to reorganize. Think about the large retail chains that are now in bankruptcy. Landlords will be able to shut down the reorganizations and have an absolute veto power over the planning process. Chains like K-Mart or the various cinema chains would have to close hundreds of stores and eliminate thousands of jobs instead of reorganizing.

What this bill does not do is protect workers who lose their wages or their retirement savings or their jobs because of corporate malfeasance and bankruptcy. There have been a number of proposals by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. DELAHUNT), the lead sponsor of this bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS), by the junior Senator from Missouri and the junior Senator from Iowa to do this, yet there is nothing in this bill to protect workers from corporate wrongdoing. And if they are victims of corporate wrongdoing, we are going to sock them in the teeth with this bill. They have to take a number behind the crooks and behind the banks and the law firms.

This bill is part of the trifecta that we are giving businesses to make up for the accounting reform that was passed because of public outrage. We should not sacrifice our constituents to the special interests at a time when they are hurting worse than at any time in a decade. I urge a no vote on the rule. I urge a no vote on the conference report. And with a no vote on the rule we would have a chance of taking a fresh look in, I might remind my colleagues, a Republican House and Senate next January, a fresh look at this bill and see if we really want to say to the low income people and the middle income people in this country we are going to sock them in the teeth. I urge a no vote on this rule, and I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise with a very heavy heart today to oppose this rule, and I must confess to being a bit befuddled to this very hour. I am a Member of this institution, like many, who supported the outstanding work that this Chamber did on bankruptcy reform, and it was politicized in the conference committee by the efforts of a Senator that I should not name and whose actions I dare not characterize into what has now become a debate over abortion in a bankruptcy bill. But since it has become that and more to the point, Mr. Speaker, it has become a debate over the freedom of speech, I must rise to oppose this rule because I would offer today that the freedom of speech and freedom to peacefully protest in the United States of America is more urgent and more important than any individual legislation will ever be, and I am not alone in thinking of this.

Professor Mary Ann Glendon, the Learned Hand Professor of Law at Harvard University, supports the view that this legislation will provide a chilling effect on the exercise of pro-life protestors in America. She is joined also in her opinion by the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops that argues "The current language on protestors in the bankruptcy bill will be used to impose another layer of penalties upon protestors whose only offense was to place their bodies in the path of those who take innocent children's lives," saying that the intent of the provision is clear. And even the Family Research Council, calling that provision morally bankrupt, said it was "plainly an attempt to silence by intimidation those who would participate in legitimate nonviolent protest."

Where the first amendment is concerned, prudence dictates caution, Mr. Speaker, and I urge a no vote.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN).

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Speaker, America does not have many home grown terrorists, and that is because we have a first amendment. Unfortunately this bill before us does terrible damage to the first amendment that our forefathers and all of us have stood so bravely for in the past. In summary, a Harvard law professor says that this is the financial death sentence for peaceful protestors.

I recall so many years ago on a cold street standing with a sign and I recall this woman that was going in to consider getting an abortion or not, and I felt completely inadequate but I told her that we would help her with services if she decided to keep her child. Today that child is probably now trying to practice to get a driver's license.

I can never support a rule or a bill on this floor which would have effectively imposed a financial death sentence on somebody who is merely standing on a sidewalk trying to help save a life.

[From The Wall Street Journal, Aug. 15, 2002]

BANKRUPTCY AND ABORTION—II

We've written before about Senator Charles Schumer's not-so-magnificent obsession with abortion and bankruptcy. He's at it again. The New York Democrat continues to play abortion politics with a promising bankruptcy bill.

The legislation in question passed both the House and Senate in 1998 with bipartisan, veto-proof majorities. The bill would make it more difficult for borrowers to file for bankruptcy and thus evade debts that they can afford to pay. Banks, which lose millions of dollars each year to these Chapter 7 filers, favor the measure for obvious reasons. But consumers also stand to benefit from a crackdown, since they're the ones burdened with higher fees and interest rates to compensate lenders for revenue lost through defaults.

Congress passed the latest version early last year and it would be law today save for Mr. Schumer, whose agenda-laced rider on abortion has mired the bill in conference ever since. His amendment would prevent pro-life activists, and only them, from using bankruptcy to avoid paying fines. The provision, said Mr. Schumer, "ensures those who use violence to close clinics can't use bankruptcy as a shield."

But no anti-abortion protestor has every succeeded in doing such a thing. Current law, which already prevents people from using bankruptcy to avoid paying fines related to violence, makes the Schumer rider redundant. The Senator's real targets aren't violent protestors of abortion but peaceful ones. And the unspecific language in his proposal—"physical obstruction," "force or the threat of force" and other pliable expressions for enterprising litigators—is a bald attempt to blur any legal distinction between the two. As it's written, vigils, sit-ins, picketing and other nonviolent activities could be interpreted as federal offenses.

We've seen this strategy from Mr. Schumer before. As a Congressman back in 1994, he successfully navigated into law the Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act. Like his current proposal, FACE uses vague terminology to group together violent and peaceful protests for purposes of meting out federal punishment. Under FACE, a first-time offender convicted of "interfering with" or "intimidating" a clinic patron is subject to a $10,000 fine and six months in jail. No doubt, when civil rights protestors occupied segregated lunch counters, they intimated many. Still, the law managed to distinguish between civil disobedience and militancy.

All their talk about deterring violence notwithstanding, the Senator and his supporters are well aware that someone lunatic enough to bomb a building is unlikely to change his mind due to adjustments in the bankruptcy code. But someone planning to distribute adoption pamphlets outside a clinic, or participate in a prayer vigil on a public sidewalk, might very well have second thoughts if a civil fine could cost him his home.

Congress is set to revisit the issue when it returns next month. Mr. Schumer insists that he "is wholly committed to passing a bankruptcy bill." Don't believe it. If he were true to his word, he would remove his amendment, allow the bankruptcy bill to pass, and reintroduce his abortion provision as a separate piece of legislation.

But Democrats know that it's Republicans who are more likely to be blamed if bankruptcy reform dies. Watch for Mr. Schumer to keep his poison pill in place right through November and continue presenting his obstructionism as "a victory for women." It certainly won't hurt his fund raising.

Republicans, nonetheless, would be wise to wait him out. The issue here is not abortion so much as free speech. Using violent extremists as straw men, liberals are hoping to snatch a formidable tool of protest from the opposition. Their efforts should be resisted on principle.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS), a champion of this bill.

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

When we began this odyssey on bankruptcy reform some 5 years ago, we began with two staunch principles guiding our pathway. One was to guarantee that those who are so overburdened, so swamped, so flooded with financial obligations that they could no longer make their way into our society's ways that they would be given the ample opportunity for a fresh start. That is what bankruptcy is all about. We guaranteed it and expanded it. As a matter of fact, it can be said that someone seeking a fresh start today under the bankruptcy reform that we want to put into the law would have an easier time than the current law. So for that purpose alone we should be supporting this legislation.

The other principle was and is that those who do approach the possibility of repaying some of the debt should be accorded a mechanism by which they can repay some of that debt over a period of years. Mind, we said, not all the debt; mind, we said, over a period of years, but yet the opportunity to regain some of the losses that the general public would encounter if this individual were allowed not to pay anything back. So those two principles have guided us right down to this moment here on this floor.

The other point that has to be made in support of the rule and the bankruptcy reform measure that underlies the rule is the fact, as was mentioned by both gentlemen from Texas in their opening remarks, that this measure over 5 years has enjoyed tremendous bipartisan support, gaining over 300 votes each and every time that it has come to the floor. Three hundred votes by any magician's count can determine through that number by itself that this was a bipartisan approval of the legislation, and it also is bicameral in different stages at different times, but by the time we came to this floor today it was bipartisan in nature.

I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

□ 1545

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, just a couple of weeks ago, an unspeakable tragedy hit not only this Congress, but it hit this Nation. That was the loss of Senator Paul Wellstone, his wife and daughter, staff and others who traveled with him on that fateful day. We lost a warrior who was not afraid to speak for the voiceless and those that could not be heard.

So I stand here today unabashedly opposed to this conference report and this rule; and I believe Senator Wellstone would not mind me standing in respect and admiration for his fight, for it was his unrelenting work in the other body that caused this issue to remain in the forefront, that although the representation of this legislation is what many of us would have wanted it to be, a respect for consumer interests as well as fiscal responsibility, it is a stomping out of the rights of the poor who cannot speak.

For anyone to say that people go happily into the bankruptcy court, I take issue, for the facts will prove out that those who file bankruptcy, the bulk of Americans who file bankruptcy, are faced with catastrophic illnesses; or the elderly, who have fallen upon hard times because of their illness; divorcees; single parents; individuals who have been laid off and now face the economic hard times of this Nation, the very people right now who are now facing 5 and 6 percent unemployment; the airline industry employees who lost their jobs after 9–11; the small business owners who collapsed in New York after 9–11. Those are who file bankruptcy. Yet we have determined that these are the very individuals that we are going to knock outside of the boundaries of having access to the bankruptcy court.

Let me tell you why. We have tried over and over again. Professor Warren at Harvard University, a specialist in bankruptcy law, for the past 5 years has said the means test is what it is, mean. It does not help my good friends in the credit union, because what it does is it puts a barrier, it closes the door, it puts the finger in the dike, if you will, for innocent, hard-working Americans who simply want to get themselves in order. It puts a means test in front of those who seek to enter the bankruptcy court; and as well, if you want to fight the issue, you must take monies that you do not have and go into a Federal Court to go and be able to dismantle that particular means test.

It argues against the mindset to support our children, for it promotes credit card debts and other debts over the ability to pay your child support payments. We have argued over and over about this, and it has not been fixed.

This is a bill that does not address the tragedy that I had in my community, Mr. Speaker, and that is the collapse of Enron. This bill does not address the tragedy of Cathy Peterson and her husband. I have committed to fight until the end so that Cathy Peterson's fight can be heard around the Nation.

What happened to Cathy Peterson? Her husband worked for Enron. While he worked for Enron, he was felled, if you will, with a catastrophic illness, terrible deadly cancer. And while Enron was engaged in its malfeasance, of course, you realize that Enron filed for bankruptcy, and within 24 hours 5,000 people were laid off or fired. Cathy Peterson's husband was one of those.

They had to pay their COBRA insurance. They lost their home, Mr. Speaker. They lost their home. He was suffering from an enormous tragic illness. They lost their home. He was fired. While Enron filed bankruptcy, while a corporate structure was allowed to stand, the Petersons were knocked off their feet.

So Cathy Peterson has asked us to put a provision in that disallows those who are filing bankruptcy, large corporations, from firing those who are off on the basis of catastrophic illnesses. We did not address that issue. So in Cathy Peterson's name, this bill should not go forward.

We must recognize that in the name of those Enron employees who were laid off, 5,000 of them, who would not have been able to secure a dime of recovery had it not been for the fight of the AFL-CIO, for the fight that I engaged in, for the fight that the Wall Street and Rainbow Push engaged in, that we were able through the court process to get each of them $13,500. Some of them still have not recovered, laid off, children coming out of school.

This bankruptcy bill does not address the needs of Americans who have fallen on hard times, who are sincere; and it does not address my good friends in the credit union industry, because those are the consumers who come every day to utilize those resources.

So in the name of women and children and hard-working Americans, taxpayers, this bill should not go forward. In the name of my dear friend and our friend, Senator Paul Wellstone, who stood in the other body, standing on behalf of those who could not speak, I am committed to say whatever happens, that we will fight to ensure that the bankruptcy laws of this Nation do not stand as a barrier to those who have worked and upon whose shoulders we have stood and built this economy.

I can stand and say with all emotion that anyone who views these passionate words as ones that cause them great discomfort, that is the purpose of these words, because the voiceless cannot speak today.

The issue of bankruptcy reform has been a heated topic of debate in this body since the first session of the 105th Congress, when shortly before the National Bankruptcy Review Commission issued its report recommending changes to the current bankruptcy laws; legislation was introduced to dramatically change the way in which consumer bankruptcies are administered under the U.S. Code, 11 U.S.C. sec. 101 et seq. We have battled with this issue until now and we see that the leadership of the House, with a renewed vigor, will force a vote on legislation for some of its favorite companies before the irons of the last election have even cooled and a day before we adjourn for the year.

Mr. and Ms. America, today is a preview of things to come. Today is the beginning of a time when corporate interests, in this case the interests of large creditors, will reign supreme and the interests of the little guy will slip further down to the bottom of the barrel.

I have consistently said that the greatest challenge before us in the bankruptcy reform efforts is solving the widely recognized inadequacies of the law in the area of consumer bankruptcy. As it has always been in the Congress, the key to this process, is, of course, successfully balancing the priorities of creditors, who desire a general reduction in the amount of debtor filing fraud, and debtors, who desire fair and simple access to bankruptcy protections when they need them. H.R. 333 does not accomplish this goal. Instead it runs the interest of consumers into the ground.

The bill before us today, will break the backs of working women, disappoints children, and discourages people who are struggling to do the right thing to get their lives back in order. This is a measure that unfairly subverts the interests of consumers to the interest of creditors—many whoms marketing strategies target individuals with questionable means of paying back the debt they incur.

During prior consideration of this bill I pointed out the unruly conduct of credit card companies that target college students with no income knowing that they are vulnerable and likely to charge up significant debts often without the knowledge and guidance of their parents. "An analysis [by Nellie Mae], a leading provider of student loans, of students who applied for credit-based loans with Nellie Mae in calendar year 2000 showed that 78 percent of undergraduate students (aged 18–25) have at least one credit card. This is up from the 67 percent of undergraduates included in a similar study by Nellie Mae in 1998. In years past, these same students would not have been given credit cards, certainly not without a cosigner." This is continued evidence that the credit card industry continues to prey on the lack of wisdom that many of our Nation's youth have about the burdens of accumulating massive amounts of debt. This bill gives them license to continue to do so.

This bill also uses an unrealistic inflexible formula to determine who is eligible for Chapter 7 bankruptcy relief. The measure uses Internal Revenue Service guidelines to determine what expenses a consumer has as opposed to using the debtors actual living expenses. The effect of this is to render many debtors ineligible for relief under Chapter 7 bankruptcy by estimating their living expenses as much less than they actually are. The formula also uses the debtors prior six months income to calculate what the debtor will have available to pay creditors even if that income is no longer available. The only way for the debtor to change these assumptions is to go into court. Let me ask you Mr. and Ms. America, what person seeking bankruptcy can afford to go to court and litigate the matter. The prospect of this expense alone is enough to force consumers to take extreme measures in order to satisfy their debts.

H.R. 333, also places the interests of creditor over the interest of children. By allowing a greater number of non-child support debts to survive bankruptcy, the measure diverts more money to creditors and away from parents paying and receiving child support. The bill sets up a competition for scarce resources between parents and children benefitting from child support both during and after the bankruptcy. Single parents facing financial crises brought on by divorce, nonpayment of support, the loss of a job, uninsured medical expenses or domestic violence will find it harder to regain economic stability through the bankruptcy process.

Many women find themselves as single parents and the primary providers for their children. As a result women are the fastest growing and largest group filing bankruptcy today. In 1999, over half a million women filed for bankruptcy by themselves—more than men filing by themselves or married couples. Of this number, over 200,000 women who filed for bankruptcy in 1999 tried to collect child support or alimony. The domestic support provisions of H.R. 333 does not solve the problems faced by women in bankruptcy and does nothing to address the additional problems it would cause to the hundreds of thousands of women forced into bankruptcy each year, including the single mothers forced into bankruptcy because they are unable to collect child support.

While women, children, students and the average working person in America are forced to make more available for creditors to seize in the event of financial difficulty, the bill makes minimal changes to that which the wealthy will be forced to part with in the same circumstance. Although the bill contains some new limits on the once unlimited homestead exemption, the so-called "millionaires' loophole," it still allows some rich debtors (those who have not been found to have committed certain types of wrongdoing, or those who have owned their home in the state longer than 40 months) to protect an unlimited amount of value in their residences. The wealthy should not be permitted to walk away from their debts and pocket millions, while working Americans get squeezed by a stringent and inflexible new rule.

I am for bankruptcy reform, but I believe that it must be equitable and fair to all interested parties. I am for bankruptcy reform that recognizes the financial interest at stake for the debtor, his or her family and the creditors. As elected officials for the American people we must protect America's families. In this time when corporations like Enron and Worldcomm have laid off thousands of employees, we should at least consider granting them the priority status they deserve. Under a bill that I had proposed, H.R. 5110, the omnibus Corporate Reform and Restoration Act, we would have raised the bankruptcy claim for workers from $4000 to $15,000. This would have ensured that they receive compensation as priority creditors for the corrupt actions of corporate malfeasance.

Financial hardship is a serious matter that deserves legislative reform that is the product of a deliberative process. This bill, is an extreme bill undertaken at the behest of special interest groups. We must protect working-class families. We must work to find a viable solution that deters abuse of the bankruptcy system while preserving the fresh start for debtors whose debts have been discharged. It is ironic that the consumer lending industry actively solicits consumers with promises of easy access to credit. We all know the pitches: "buy-now, pay later;" "No interest expenses for the first six months/year etc;" "No credit check, your job is your credit." Then, after addicting debtors to this "financial crack" lenders come to us begging for reform. Surely lenders bare some culpability for these beguiling and misleading advertising blitzes which entice individuals who might not otherwise qualify or apply for credit. Surely they have some roll to play in the unprecedented levels of American debt.

Congress has a time honored tradition of careful consideration of bankruptcy laws dating back 100 years. In the past members of this body have elected to carefully preserve an insolvency system that provides for a fresh start for honest, hard working debtors, protects small businesses and jobs, and fairly balances the rights of debtors against the rights of creditors. This measure is an unfortunate departure from this tradition and places the financial well being of the American people in harms way. I oppose this legislation and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JENKINS).

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule. This legislation appears to me to be a compromise that is filled with positive aspects of the give and take of the legislative process and saturated with the element of common sense that both sides to this controversy say that they strive to achieve.

In one aspect that has already been mentioned, it penalizes the adjudicated intentional violator of the law and the intentional tort feasor and precludes him from escaping the consequences of his act by hiding behind the provisions of the bankruptcy act. I think this is entirely proper, because the bankruptcy act was never intended to protect anyone in this situation.

At the same time, it protects the innocent who are simply exercising their constitutional rights, who are lawfully assembled or expressing their freedom of speech.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the rule and to vote for the conference report.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. SHADEGG).

Mr. SHADEGG. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant, but adamant, opposition to this rule. I say to my colleagues, make no mistake about it. The issue before us is not abortion, and the issue before us is not bankruptcy. The issue before us today is very important. It is the constitutional right of free speech and peaceful protest.

Mr. Speaker, this rule is an unprecedented and shameful attack on the right of free speech and peaceful protest. It does not matter where you stand on abortion; you should oppose this rule and you should oppose this legislation. If we pass this legislation, what we will be doing is for the first time in American history creating two categories of free speech, two categories of peaceful protest: one protected by our laws and one not protected. We will be saying that, based on content of your protest, you are either protected by our law or not protected.

It does not matter where you stand on the abortion law. If you care about the right of peaceful protest, if you believe in the right of people to exercise their constitutional first amendment rights, you must defeat this rule and we must go back and do this legislation again. Those who honor the right of free speech, those who honor the right of peaceable protest must understand this is a fundamental assault on the Constitution of the United States.

I urge the defeat of both the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1⅙ minute to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART).

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule for bankruptcy reform. This Congress and prior Congresses have been very dedicated to making sure that this country benefits from bankruptcy reform and these attempts have been made to draw up a very good bill. Now we finally have the opportunity to finish the job.

Congress has a responsibility to pass this legislation now and to stop the bankruptcy system's abusers, those who have actually the ability to repay these debts but use the current bankruptcy system as a financial planning tool. This gaming of the system carries too high a cost to consumers, by raising costs at an extremely critical time for our economy.

Our economy needs all the help it can get. Consumer spending and consumer credit are key elements of any plan for economic growth, and bankruptcy abuse is having such a horrific effect on consumers' finances that if current practices continue, approximately one out of seven households will have filed for bankruptcy within the past decade.

Bankruptcy legislation has been debated. It has been refined; it has been revised and amended for years. It is now time for action.

Unfortunately, much of this debate has been focused on the abortion provisions in this bill. I ask my colleagues to look at the real effects of those provisions. They are not effective. They will not harm lawful protesters. I urge my colleagues to support the rule.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise deeply disappointed. I am a strong supporter of bankruptcy reform. I was a former retailer and business person, and many of my supporters are in support of this. I cannot believe that we are here on the floor debating this today and that this bill has been brought up.

We are likely to hear in the closing remarks from some of our leadership that this does not apply to pro-lifers and it does not sit on free speech. I think they are terribly wrong, and they put many of us in deep conflict in trying to defend civil liberties and, at the same time, reform bankruptcy; and many of us are deeply disappointed in our leadership that this bill has come forth.

I think many Americans around the country, as nearly every pro-family and pro-life group in America, has stood arm in arm against this bill. National Right to Life, which does not take positions on issues such as this, is about the only one, and it does not mean that they favor the bill; it just means they are silent.

This is going to be double-scored if the rule passes, and many Members are going to have their ratings go down among conservative groups, as well as liberal groups, permanently, because they have not listened to their constituents at the grassroots level and the organizations that represent them.

We are going to hear probably quoted from a memo by Kenneth Starr, who has been hired by the business interests to advocate a position that is manifestly inaccurate in his memo. He, for example, tries to address the question and correctly points out that "willful" and "intentional" are the same. But that memo is silent on "malicious," and that is a critical, critical point on this. He does not have anything in there on "malicious."

The FACE Act makes it a tie; it ties the two together and makes pro-lifers liable in a way that others are not. PETA is not liable. They do not have a FACE Act. This law focuses on pro-life demonstrators. Yes, it can reach many other demonstrators, possibly even anti-war demonstrators if they protest in front of a factory that produces weapons.

Peaceful protestors. The Mahoney case, one protester, kneeling in prayer, was in front of a locked door, was found guilty by the D.C. Circuit Court. One kneeling Christian, silently protesting abortion, has had the force of law thrown at them. Where are we going in America?

Also in the Starr memo there is another false assumption, and that is that somehow the courts are going to interpret this separate from the same-as-additional law. The courts never interpret a new law as redundant. They assume that we have a purpose. Senator SCHUMER is correct in saying there is a congressional intent with this law. The courts will rule that.

This is, in fact, a broad expansion of the government potentially restricting civil liberties in all parts of protest, but particularly those of us who were very pro-business, are first and foremost deeply motivated by defending the most innocent of life, the little children. We are not talking about violent protests. We tried to compromise. We definitely favor it for violent, but peaceful, kneeling prayer should never be deprived from civil liberties.

I urge my colleagues to carefully consider those commands from Mary Ann Gloran of the Harvard Law School.

Because the proposed language is substantively identical to FACE, it will be read in light of existing decisions under FACE. Existing interpretations of FACE will almost certainly be read into § 523(a)(20). Worse, abortion clinics and their supporters will likely argue that by re-enacting the same statutory language, Congress has approved existing decisions and those confirmed their status as valid and appropriate interpretations of FACE itself. This is a critical point, because existing interpretations of FACE in the lower courts, extraordinarily favorable to the abortion clinics and their supporters, have not yet been accepted or rejected by the Supreme Court of the United States. Congressional passage of proposed §523(a)(20) could figure prominently in eventual Supreme Court arguments on the interpretation of FACE, lending plausible support to the worst interpretations of that statute.

I will not consider in this opinion letter the interpretations of "force or threat of force," "intentionally injure," or "intimidate." Some interpretations of those provisions have been surprisingly expansive, but those forms of protest are not the issue for most protestors. The real work of FACE, and of proposed §523(a)(20), is in the provisions that target anyone who "by physical obstruction . . . interferes with . . . or attempts to . . . interfere with' interfere with" access to a clinic. Each of these terms has been construed or defined to mean more than first appears. No actual interference, and no actual physical obstruction, is required for a violation. Courts have found violations in peaceful protest that did not actually prevent access to clinics.

"Physical obstruction" is defined in 18 U.S.C. §248(e)(4) to mean making ingress or egress "impassable . . . or unreasonably difficult or hazardous." What is "unreasonably difficult" has, in the lower federal courts, sometimes turned out to be remote from physical obstruction.

Thus, in United States v. Mahoney, 247 F.3d 279 (D.C. Cir. 2001), the court found physical obstruction and interference with access from a single protestor kneeling in prayer outside a locked door to an abortion clinic. Id. at 283–84. The door was a "rarely used" emergency exit. The court said that someone might have used the door, and that the law does not distinguish frequently and infrequently used doors. More remarkable still, the court held that a single person kneeling in prayer rendered use of that door "unreasonably difficult" and forced patients to use a different entrance. Id. at 284.

Mahoney also held that six other defendants physically obstructed and interfered with access to another door. The court of appeals' entire discussion of this holding is that five protestors "knelt or sat within five feet of the front door," that the sixth defendant "was pacing just behind them," and that they "offered passive resistance and had to be carried away." Id. at 283. The court does not even say whether they were arrayed across the sidewalk or along the sidewalk, whether they left a passage open, or any other fact that might to a plain meaning understanding of "physical obstruction" or to preserving a reasonable right to protest. It was enough for a violation that they were near the door.

Both FACE and proposed §523(a)(20) are limited to "intentional" violations, but Mahoney shows that protection to be illusory. The court found specific intent to interfere with access to the clinic, even in the case of the lone protestor praying before the locked door. It relied on the fact that the protestor prayed that women approaching the clinic would change their mind about getting an abortion; the court quoted his prayer as evidence of criminal intent. 247 F.3d at 283–84. To similar effect is United States v. Gregg, 32 F. Supp. 2d 151, 157 (D.N.J. 1998), aff'd, 226 F.3d 253 (3d Cir. 2000), cert. denied, 523 U.S. 971 (2001). Gregg had much more evidence of actual obstruction than Mahoney. Even so, the Gregg court relied on defendants' "anti-abortion statements, including imploring women not to go into the clinic or not to kill their babies," and on the fact that defendants "carried anti-abortion signs," as evidence of forbidden intent. The government in these cases has offered evidence of opposition to abortion as evidence of specific intent to obstruct access, and the courts have relied on this evidence for that purpose. Clinics and their supporters would of course argue that Congress has codified these holdings if it enacts proposed §523(a)(20).

Courts have emphasized that FACE plaintiffs need not prove actual obstruction. "It is not necessary to show that a clinic was shut down, that people could not get into a clinic at all for a period of time, or that anyone was actually denied medical services." People v. Kraeger, 160 F. Supp. 2d 360, 373 (N.D.N.Y. 2001). Plaintiffs need not "show that any particular person was interfered with by the defendants' obstruction." United States v. Wilson, 2 F. Supp. 2d 1170, 1171 n.1 (E.D. Wis.), aff'd as United States v. Balint, 201 F.3d 928 (7th Cir. 2000).

To sum up, proposed §523(a)(20) would reenact statutory language that has been interpreted not to require actual obstruction, has been interpreted to prohibit a single protestor kneeling in prayer near an unused exit, and has been interpreted to treat anti-abortion statements as evidence of criminal intent. These interpretations would almost certainly be read into §523(a)(20), and there would be a serious argument that Congress had confirmed these interpretations in FACE itself.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON).

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H. Res. 606, the rule providing for consideration of the Bankruptcy Abuse, Prevention and Consumer Protection Act Conference Report. Congress has been working on balanced bankruptcy reform legislation for nearly 5 years. The conference report on H.R. 333 reflects countless hours of bipartisan efforts.

This conference report does not penalize any lawful behavior. It only applies when a person violates the law; second, a court then enters an award against that person; third, the person later files a bankruptcy other than a chapter 13 bankruptcy or liquidation bankruptcy; and fourth, that person thereafter seeks to discharge a debt based on fines or penalties assessed because of the unlawful protest activity.

This provision is written in an evenhanded, neutral way. It does not single out abortion-related protests, but it targets any violent protestors of providers of any lawful goods or services. It would equally apply to the anti-IMF/World Bank protestors who threw rocks through the window of the bank and attempted to impede delegates from entering the World Bank's headquarters. It could also apply to similar protests by animal rights activists, environmentalists, and unions.

As a committed pro-life Member of Congress, I am satisfied that the compromise does not impose unconstitutional or discriminatory burden upon peaceful pro-life protestors. I want to thank the chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) for his leadership on this issue, and I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the underlying bill.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, again, I want to reiterate, I rise in very strong opposition to this rule and to the underlying bill that will follow it if the rule does pass.

Let me again point out that this bankruptcy reform conference report contains an unrelated provision that was not included in the bill that passed out of this body that discriminates against peaceful, pro-life protestors, and that is why I oppose this.

Mary Ann Glendon wrote an incisive analysis that every Member should read. The Catholic Conference has put out a very strong statement pointing out how unjust this language is. This takes the FACE bill passed back in 1994 over the opposition of my good friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER) and myself, and makes it even worse by making civil fines that are levied nondischargeable.

Much has been made about the Starr memo, which I would respectfully submit misses the point by a mile and is unworthy of Ken Starr. He argues, for example, and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. CANNON) made this point a moment ago, that rigorous intent requirements; i.e. law-breaking, are included in the conference report. Martin Luther King was an intentional law breaker. We rightly honor him with a national holiday. A tremendous man who went to prison—served short prison sentences—and faced modest and proportionate penalties in his quest for social justice. For Dr. King, law breaking was a means to an end.

Pro-lifers, on the other hand, are subjected to ruinous penalties for the same acts of civil disobedience. Nonviolent civil disobedience, obstruction, getting in the way, as was mentioned by one of my colleagues, kneeling in front of a door, praying at an abortion clinic, is construed to be a violation of the FACE Act and then, when the penalties are levied, the pro-lifers cannot discharge the ruinous judgements imposed on them.

Mr. Starr also says that section 330 is evenhanded. That, I say to my colleagues, is unmitigated nonsense, it is misleading, and it is false. Section 330 only has the appearance of evenhandedness. Other activists, labor activists, antiwar, PETA, all the groups that use civil disobedience as a means of bringing attention to their cause get a slap on the wrist, a 30-buck fine, they are out of jail the next day. Not so for pro-life protestors. They are under the FACE Act and are discriminated against and singled out for ruinous monetary penalties and criminal penalties and, again, we are talking about nonviolent activities.

Back in 1994 I would remind my colleagues I offered the substitute amendment to FACE on the floor that said for those who throw bombs or kill at abortion clinics, are jailed and appropriately fined. But for peaceful protestors, those men and women whose only motive is to try to deter an abortion, another act of violence, to say there is another way, so they have a sit-in. Perhaps they sit in front of a door or they have a pray-in. These things happen all the time. A successful complaint made by the abortion clinic, for example, would be nondischargeable under this legislation.

So to say section 330 is evenhanded when the underlying statute is applied unevenly to pro-lifers versus all other activists is unmitigated nonsense, and again I am very discouraged that Mr. Starr would put out such a misleading memo.

Vote "no" on the rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, before I begin my remarks, let me insert for the RECORD the memo written on October 4, 2002 by the Honorable Kenneth Starr addressed to Mr. BARTLETT of the Financial Services Roundtable, since the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) has repeatedly referred to it.

Washington, DC, October 4, 2002.

Hon. STEVE BARTLETT,
President, the Financial Services Roundtable,
Washington, DC

DEAR MR. BARTLETT: This letter responds to your request for my views with respect to Section 330 of the Conference Report on H.R. 333, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act of 2002. In particular, you requested my view concerning two aspects of Section 330: the effect it will have on anti-abortion protests, be they lawful or unlawful; and the effect it will have on other types of protests, including the recent IMF/World Bank protests.

In my view, Section 330 will have very little practical effect. Importantly, the provision does not penalize any lawful behavior. To the contrary, it applies only if (i) a person violates the law; (ii) a court then enters an award against that person or the person settles the charges; (iii) the person later files a bankruptcy other than a Chapter 13 bankruptcy; (iv) the person thereafter seeks to discharge a debt based on fines, damage awards, or other penalties assessed because of the unlawful protest activity; and (v) the creditor continues to pursue the matter. Even then, Section 330 overlaps almost entirely with Bankruptcy Code §523(a), which already prohibits the discharge of fines payable to the government and civil damages resulting from intentional injury to others. As a result, Section 330 will have at most minimal practical effect. What is more, the Conference version of Section 330 contains rigorous intent requirements that should prevent any innocent protesters from being swept up in its provisions. Thus, even if Section 330 does have some limited practical effect, that effect should be felt only by the intentional lawbreakers it expressly targets.

In answer to your second question, Section 330 is written in an evenhanded, neutral fashion. It applies not only to abortion-related protests, but also to unlawful protests targeted at the providers of any lawful goods or services. By its express terms, Section 330 applies—with no exceptions—to all those who unlawfully intimidate or interfere with a person by physical obstruction or threat of force if those actions were motivated by the person's obtaining or providing of any lawful goods or services. Thus, it would apply, for example, to the anti-IMF/World Bank protesters who apparently threw rocks through the window of a bank and attempted to impede delegates from entering or departing the World Bank's headquarters. So too, it would apply to similar protests by animal rights activists, environmentalists, and unions.

It bears emphasis that the Conference compromise bill represents a substantial improvement over the original Senate bill. Under the Senate bill, debt related to an unproven allegation of "harassment," or an unintentional violation of a court order, could have been nondischargeable. In contrast, under the Conference compromise, there must have been an actual and intentional "violation" of either the federal Freedom of Access to Clinic Entrances Act, 18 U.S.C. §248 ("FACE"), or a court order. These significant improvements over the now-replaced Senate version are some of the reasons that Section 330 will not have significant practical or legal effect in light of the state of existing law.

Section 330 is primarily a restatement of existing law

Section 330 is primarily a restatement of existing law. The Bankruptcy Code has long provided that any debt "for a fine, penalty, or forfeiture payable to and for the benefit of a governmental unit" is not dischargeable in bankruptcy. 11 U.S.C. §523(a)(7). As a result, criminal fines and civil penalties payable to the government are already nondischargeable.

The Bankruptcy Code further provides that civil damages payable to private parties are nondischargeable if they result from "willful and malicious injury by the debtor to another entity or to the property of another entity." 11 U.S.C. §523(a)(6). The courts have interpreted this language broadly to include injuries to intangible personal or property rights. See 4 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶523.12[2] (15th ed. rev. 2002). As a result, the pivotal limitation on this provision is the intent element—a debt is nondischargeable in bankruptcy only if the debtor intentionally caused the injury. See Kawaauhau v. Geiger, 523 U.S. 57, 61 (1998).

Our research has revealed that, to date, three courts have issued published decisions on the question whether debtors' abortion protest-related debts were dischargeable in bankruptcy. Each held the debts to be nondischargeable under Section 523(a)(6). See In re Treshman, 258 B.R. 613 (Bankr. D. Md. 2001); In re Bray, 256 B.R. 708 (Bankr. D. Md. 2000); In re Behn, 242 B.R. 229 (Bankr. W.D.N.Y. 1999). As one court explained, the debt was not dischargeable because the debtor had acted "with the specific intent to interfere with or intimidate the plaintiffs from engaging in legal medical practices and procedures." Bray, 256 B.R. at 711. Each court also noted that the conduct at issue, which included apparent death threats, was unlawful and unprotected by the First Amendment.

Of course, the ultimate issue of dischargeability necessarily depends on the facts of each case. But Section 330 is drafted in such a way that it overlaps with Section 523(a)(6). Under Section 330, a debt is nondischargeable only if the debtor violated either FACE or a pre-existing court order or injunction.

Under the first of those circumstances, a debt is nondischargeable only if the debtor: (i) intentionally injured, intimidated, or interfered with a person, (ii) by force, threat of force, or physical obstruction, (iii) because the person was obtaining or providing any lawful goods or services (such as fur products or banking services). Because the injury, intimidation, or interference must be intentional, any such debt would likely satisfy the existing criteria for nondischargeability under Section 523(a)(6). One might argue that Section 523(a)(6) erects a higher standard than Section 330 because it requires "willful and malicious" (as opposed to intentional) injury, but the terms "intentional," "willful," and "malicious" have similar meanings in the law. The Supreme Court has held, for example, that "willful" means "deliberate or intentional" in Section 523(a)(6). Geiger, 523 U.S. at 61. Thus, the Section 330 and 523(a)(6) standards appear to be very similar.

The second circumstance under which Section 330 renders debt nondischargeable is when (i) the debtor violated a court order or injunction that complies with the First Amendment and protects the provision of lawful goods or services, and (ii) either the debtor's violation was "intentional or knowing," or the violation occurred after the debtor had previously been found to have violated the same court order or another order protecting access to the same facility or person. This provision of Section 330 might expand somewhat on Section 523(a)(6), because a debtor might argue that although he meant to violate an injunction (such as an injunction prohibiting him from approaching within 8 feet of a clinic entrance), he had no intent to intimidate or impede anyone while within the restricted area. Thus far, however, the courts have held that damages attributable to violation of a court injunction against abortion-related protest activity are "ipso facto the result of a 'willful and malicious injury'" for purposes of Section 523(a)(6), in part because the violation reflects an "intention to cause the very harm to the protected persons that [the] order was designed to prevent." Behn, 242 B.R. at 238. While I find this rationale questionable, it reflects the fact that courts to date have already used Section 523(a)(6) for the same purpose that Section 330 would serve. Thus, Section 330 represents either a restatement of existing law or, at most, a modest extension of that law.

Even if section 330 were interpreted more broadly than the existing nondischargeability provisions of the bankruptcy code, it would still have no effect on lawful protest and little effect on unlawful protest

Even if courts were to interpret Section 330 more broadly than Section 523, the practical consequences would be minimal. Section 330 does not affect lawful protest at all. Even with respect to unlawful protest, it applies only if: a person committed an intentional violation of the federal FACE statute or a pre-existing court order or injunction; a court entered an award against that person, or the person settled the charges; the person later filed bankruptcy other a Chapter 13 bankruptcy; the person would otherwise be entitled to discharge a protest-related debt in bankruptcy, notwithstanding Section 523(a) and the Bankruptcy Code's other existing limitations on dischargeability; and the creditor continued to pursue the matter. It would appear that very few, if any, people will fall into this category. As noted above, we have found only three reported cases in which people challenged the dischargeability of abortion protest-related debt, and in each instance the court held the debt was nondischargeable under existing law. Thus, Section 330 would have had no effect in any of the reported cases to date.

Even if a small number of protesters are affected by Section 330, the Conference version of the bill seeks to ensure that "innocent" protestors will not be affected. As explained above, Section 330 applies only to those who either (1) intentionally injure, intimidate, or interfere with a person by force, threat of force, or physical obstruction; or (ii) intentionally or repeatedly violate a court order that complies with the First Amendment. While some such conduct can be "peaceful," it is nonetheless intentional conduct that has a physical element to it (in the case of the FACE statute) or that has already been judicially determined to thwart legitimate state interests (in the case of an existing injunction). Moreover, peaceful of "innocent" conduct is not likely to lead to substantial damage awards that a debtor would need to discharge in bankruptcy. Instead, the reported cases to date have involved much more provocative, highly aggressive behavior, including perceived death threats, "wanted" posters, and the like. For these reasons, it is unlikely that anyone other than intentional and determined lawbreakers, no matter how sincere the may be, will be affected.

Section 330 is non-discriminatory

In any event, neutrality of operation is the order of the day. Section 330, as I indicated above, applies by its express terms to all those who unlawfully intimidate or interfere with a person by physical obstruction or threat of force if their actions were motivated by the victim's obtaining or providing of any lawful goods or services. Thus, it applies equally and neutrally to unlawful activity directed toward the providers or recipients of all lawful goods or services, not only abortion-related services.

The recent IMF/World Bank protests provide a useful example of Section 330's intended neutrality. Many protestors, it appears, attempted to interfere, by physical obstruction, with the ability of the IMF/World Bank delegates to attend or leave meetings because they disapproved of lawful services provided by the IMF and World Bank. Other protestors reportedly threw rocks through a window of a bank. All of this behavior is covered by the plain language of Section 330. Also protected are similar protests by animal-rights activists against stores that lawfully sell fur products and the like; environmentalists that target oil and other companies; and some unlawful union strike activity. As long as an unlawful protest satisfies the Section 330 criteria, it is covered to the same extent as an anti-abortion protest.

Conclusion

In sum, as modified in conference, Section 330 is primarily a restatement of existing law. It targets only intentional unlawful activity, and even then is not likely to have significant practical effect. To the extent that it does have such effect, Section 330 will apply neutrally and evenhandedly to anti-abortion protests and other protests aimed at business establishments.

While there is, to be sure, some risk that a court might construe the statute unreasonably, the conference minimized that risk by drafting the statute clearly. To provide further protection, however, one of the sponsors of the legislation (or another Representative) might consider making a statement of intent on the House floor. While courts vary in their treatment of such statements, some judges give consideration to floor statements, especially those made by a sponsor of the legislation. As a result, a suggested floor statement is attached to this letter, for such consideration as may be deemed appropriate.

Sincerely,

KENNETH W. STARR.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and the underlying bill. This is essential bankruptcy reform which will help revive our economy.

In 1998, $40 billion of debt was written off, and that amounts to a hidden tax of $400 for every family in this country who pays their bills on time and is agreed upon, and that tax hits the poor people hardest because that type of a tax is regressive.

We need to pass this legislation to prevent bankruptcy from being used as a financial planning tool.

Now, my friends over here on my right claim that this is going to hurt poor people. That is absolutely not true, because people who are genuinely unable to repay their bills will be able to get their discharge through chapter 7. But where there is a possibility of people repaying their bills over a 5-year period of time, or some of their bills, then they have to go through a reorganization, so that the money is recouped and not passed on to the consumers.

I would point out that if this legislation goes down, either on the vote on the rule or the vote on the conference report, the current homestead exemption which is unlimited in places like Texas and Florida will end up still being the law and the corporate crooks will be able to put millions in their mansions and shield them from bankruptcy. There is a partial plug to prevent people who defraud the public from being able to do that, notwithstanding State law. So voting down the rule gives the corporate crooks a get-out-of-bankruptcy-free card.

Now, to my friends over here on my left, we have heard an awful lot of allegations that this bankruptcy provision that was negotiated between Senator SCHUMER and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) is an outrageous attempt to financially ruin pro-life protestors. There is not a person in this Chamber that has given his life more to the pro-life movement than the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), and he negotiated this and he signed off on this agreement, and I think that we ought to respect his work for this pro-life movement.

We have heard that section 330 of the bill is an outrageous trampling of first amendment rights. Let me read it for my colleagues.

It says, "Except that nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to affect any expressive conduct, including peaceful picketing, peaceful prayer, or other peaceful demonstration protected from legal prohibition by the first amendment of the Constitution."

Read the bill. It does not affect first amendment rights. They are protected by the Constitution, and the black and white text of this provision protects things that are protected by the first amendment.

We have heard about the infamous Starr memorandum. A part of that says that section 330 does not affect lawful protest at all. What it does do is affect unlawful protest. And you are on the side of people who break the law, who want to break the law. What we do here is we protect people who want to abide by the law.

Now, in order for section 330 to come into play, there have to be nine steps that are done by the person whose debt is to be declared nondischargeable, and I want to go through them.

First, there must be a violation of Federal or State statutory law. Second, the violation must result in some type of monetary liability such as civil or statutory damages. Third, the monetary liability must be based on a Federal or State court order or from a settlement agreement entered into by the debtor. Fourth, the violation of the law must result from an intentional act by the debtor. This does not apply to unintentional violations of the law and, thus, it would not apply to innocent protestors. Fifth, the intentional act must involve force, the threat of force, or physical obstruction. Sixth, the intentional act must result in intentional injury, intimidation, or interference, or intentional damage or destruction of property. Seventh, the debtor must have injured, intimidated, or interfered with a person because such person obtained or provided lawful goods or services or because a facility provides lawful goods or services. Eighth, the debtor must file for bankruptcy relief; and ninth, the party holding the monetary judgment against the debtor must bring an action in the bankruptcy court for the purpose of having the court determine whether the debtor's liability for the judgment is nondischargeable under section 330.

They have to do all nine of these things to get a debt nondischargeable.

Now, if the opponents of this bill and the opponents of the rule are successful, the current bankruptcy law which would stand makes all fines and forfeitures nondischargeable, including those that arise under the FACE Act. So defeating a necessary bankruptcy reform is not going to accomplish this purpose. The rule and the bill ought to pass.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, at this time we are nearing the end of the speakers that we have and I would welcome an opportunity for the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) to close, and then it would be my intent to briefly speak and then yield to our final speaker.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as we have heard, there is controversy on this rule. This matter has been pending for some time. I personally support the rule and the bill, and I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This has been a vigorous debate today, one which has I think allowed the opportunity for both sides of our conference to speak forthrightly about the issues and the ideas which they see on this bankruptcy bill. I will tell my colleagues that I believe that this is an economic development package, part of the plan that we have from the Republican Conference to help consumers and to help make sure the economy moves properly. So I support not only this rule, but the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) to close.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS), the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. SENSENBRENNER), the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), and the Committee on the Judiciary for the extraordinarily long and hard years of dedicated work that they have attended to this subject.

Mr. Speaker, let me make another statement fairly clear. I believe it is safe to say that if it were not for my personal insistence this bill would not be on the floor today. Therefore, I think it is safe to conclude that it is I that put this bill on the floor. Why would I do that? Why would I put a bill on the floor that gives even myself a conflict of visions?

There are two great values that are addressed in this bill, two values that I hold dear in my heart and high in my hopes and dreams for this great Nation: The one that precious lives will be saved, and the other that they will be taught how to live precious lives.

Mr. Speaker, a good nation has a government that honors the goodness of its people. A good nation is a nation that has law that knows the goodness of its people and reflects and encourages them.

□ 1615

A good Nation will have a law that honors what we teach our children, so that in the law itself our children are encouraged to those teachings which we pray into their lives will make their lives successful in their own right and a blessing in the lives of others.

One of those things we teach our children is to be careful what obligations we make in our lives, and to fulfill our obligations, and default only as a last resort and as a matter of personal embarrassment.

Our existing bankruptcy laws do not reflect that teaching. Our existing bankruptcy laws belie our teaching when we are parents at our best, instructing our children on the hopes that are our highest, about their personal responsibilities. In short, Mr. Speaker, our existing bankruptcy law says to our very same children: little darling, you are a fool if you do not file. It is wrong, Mr. Speaker.

This bill is not here about the money. To think this bill is about who gets the money or who keeps the money is too shallow an understanding. This bill is about the character of a Nation and the character of that Nation's law, and it is important. It is critical.

In this and in other ways, we must strive to have a government that knows the goodness of its own people and has the decency to expect it and to reflect it. That is why we are here with bankruptcy reform. That is what we are about.

And yes, because of a provision that was put into this bill in the other body, we are forced, and I, as deeply in my heart as any Member in this Chamber, am forced to find myself in conflict with another, perhaps even higher value, the right to present myself in encouragement to others to not do this thing that would destroy this life, and to do so without fear of punishment in our courts under a misguided law that has no respect for our very own Bill of Rights, and that is the FACE Act. It is a sabotage, we know that.

But bless his heart, our first, best champion for the life of the unborn, the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE), fought this demon to a draw to the best of his ability. We have people now who say to the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE), that is not good enough. I am not sorry, I say to the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE). I thank the gentleman from Illinois. He is, in this case, as he has always been, for the precious life of our precious babies, a good, true, and faithful servant. He did his best. I love the gentleman for his commitment. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) is to be respected for what he did here to help our cause.

How do we save our precious allies and friends and neighbors and devoted servants that go out there at risk already from the terror, the economic terror of the FACE Act? We do not do it by changing this law. The chairman of the committee has made that clear. There is no protection under FACE by defeating this bill.

If FACE is the evil, a trespass against our Bill of Rights, a trespass against our desire to save the unborn that we say it is, then let us not fight this mock battle; let us fight the real battle. The assault should be on FACE.

I believe I am correct in saying that those who find life precious on both sides of the aisle are the majority in this body, and the majority of this body drawn from both sides of the aisle can defeat FACE. That is what we ought to be doing.

So I say to my friends, save what we can; do not lose what we can over the hope that is without substance. Do not sacrifice the gains in the instruction of our children over the failed effort to protect those who would try to save our children. Vote for this rule; vote for this bill. Give our children a better break and a better understanding, and honor their parents as they teach their babies. Then come back, if you will, with a vengeance and defeat this atrocity against our basic human liberties called FACE. Get the villain and save the children.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule for the consideration of H.R. 333, the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act.

This legislation appears to be a compromise that is filled with positive aspects of the give and take involved in the legislative process and saturated with the element of comment sense that both sides to this controversy say that they strive to achieve.

Today, I rise to discuss one aspect that has been mentioned frequently on the floor today. The compromise language agreed to by the conference committee penalizes the adjudicated intentional violator of the law and the intentional tortfeasor and precludes him from escaping the consequences of this act by hiding behind the provisions of the bankruptcy act. This is entirely proper because the bankruptcy act was never intended to protect anyone in this situation.

At the same time, it protects the innocent who are simply exercising their constitutional rights—who are lawfully assembled or exercising their freedom of speech.

We should remember that this legislation is the product of years of hard work by the Judiciary Committee in both the House and Senate. This legislation answers a plea from across our land to address a serious weakness that exists in our system of providing relief to those who are overwhelmed by financial burdens.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the rule.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support for the rule providing consideration for H.R. 333, the Bankruptcy Reform Conference Report, because this issue boils down to two words: personal responsibility. If a person assumes a debt, they are obligated to do everything in their power to pay it off. Creditors should be made whole, if possible. However, a safety net must remain for those who legitimately cannot pay their debts.

Some of my colleagues are trying to paint the word creditors to mean faceless financial institutions who are tricking consumers into assuming debt. They specifically speak of credit card debt. They unfortunately fail to note that credit card debt in the United States amounts to only three point eight percent of all household debt. Furthermore, only one percent of credit card accounts end up in bankruptcy. Of that one percent it is estimated that fifteen percent of those accounts can afford to repay some or all of their debt.

The people who are truly being hurt by our current bankruptcy system are Americans who play by the rules and pay off their debts. Bankruptcy costs the average American family about $400 a year.

Needs-based bankruptcy reform is well overdue, and that is what this Bankruptcy Conference Report delivers. It is the people who game the system that we need to stop.

I listened to my colleague from Virginia (Mr. MORAN). He stated that more people filed for bankruptcy than graduated from college. That is a staggering fact. It's a transference of cost from those who overspend to those who carefully manage their money.

I support the Bankruptcy Conference Report's provisions which strengthen Code protections for ex-spouses and children. They have to be supported. In the current bankruptcy law, child support and alimony are placed seventh behind attorney fees as debt obligations. If enacted, this bill would move child support and alimony payments to first on the list of debt obligations.

Also under current law, some debtors use the automatic stay to avoid paying child support payments after they file for bankruptcy. The Bankruptcy Conference Report ensures less delay in the proper payment of child support. I vehemently oppose any legislation that would reduce the ability of women and children to receive support payments.

This Conference Report is a good legislation that moves us in the right direction, and I ask my colleagues from both sides of the aisle to join me in support of this reasonable reform by voting in favor of the rule providing for consideration of this Conference Report.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises today to express his support for the rule on the conference report for the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act (H.R. 333). This Member is an original cosponsor of H.R. 333, which the House first passed on March 1, 2001, by a vote of 306–108. This Member is pleased that the House and Senate conferees have finally reached an agreement on bankruptcy reform which President George W. Bush is expected to sign. It is important to note that bankruptcy reform bills passed both the House and the Senate in the 105th and 106th Congresses. In the 105th Congress, the House passed a bankruptcy reform conference report, while the Senate failed to pass the conference report. In the 106th Congress, former President Bill Clinton pocket vetoed a bankruptcy reform conference report. During this Congress, the Conference Report was delayed for too long over of all things, a tenuous connection drawn to the subject of abortion clinics by conferees from the other body.

First, this Member would thank the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEGAS], for introducing the original House bankruptcy legislation, H.R. 333. This Member would also like to express his appreciation to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER], the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for his efforts in bringing this conference report to the House Floor for consideration.

This Member supports the conference report for the Bankruptcy Abuse Prevention and Consumer Protection Act for numerous reasons; however, the most important reasons include the following:

First, this Member supports the provision in the conference report for H.R. 333 which provides for a means testing, needs-based, formula when determining whether an individual should file for Chapter 7 or Chapter 13 bankruptcy. Chapter 7 bankruptcy allows a debtor to be discharged of his personal liability for many unsecured debts. In addition, there is no requirement that a Chapter 7 filer repay many of his or her debts. However, Chapter 13 bankruptcy filers commit to repay some portion of his or her debts under a repayment plan.

Some Chapter 7 filers actually have the capacity to repay some of what they owe, but they choose Chapter 7 bankruptcy and are able to walk away from these debts. For example, the stories in which an individual filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy and then proceeds to take a nice vacation and/or buys a new car are too common. Moreover, the status quo is costing the average American individual and family increased costs for consumer goods and credit because of the amount of debt which is never repaid to creditors.

As a response to these concerns, the needs-based test of the conference report of H.R. 333 will help ensure that high income filers, who could repay some of what they owe, are required to file Chapter 13 bankruptcy as compared to Chapter 7. This needs-based system takes a debtor's income, expenses, obligations and any special circumstances into account to determine whether he or she has the capacity to repay a portion of their debts.

Second, this Member supports the additional monthly expense items that are exempted from consideration under the needs-based test which determines, under the conference report of H.R. 333, whether a person can file either a Chapter 7 or 13 version of bankruptcy. These expenses include the following: reasonable expenses incurred to maintain the safety of the debtor and debtor's family from domestic violence; an additional food and clothing allowance if demonstrated to be reasonable and necessary; and actual expenses for the care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled member of the debtor's household or immediate family.

Third, this Member supports the permanent extension of Chapter 12 bankruptcy in the conference report of H.R. 333 since it allows family farmers to reorganize their debts as compared to liquidating their assets. Using the Chapter 12 bankruptcy provision has been an important and necessary option for family farmers throughout the nation. It has allowed family farmers to reorganize their assets in a manner which balances the interests of creditors and the future success of the involved farmer.

If Chapter 12 bankruptcy provisions are not permanently extended for family farmers, its expiration on January 1, 2003, would be another very painful blow to an agricultural sector already reeling from low commodity prices. Not only will many family farmers have no viable option but to end their operations, it likely will also cause land values to plunge. Such a decrease in value of farmland will affect the ability of family farmers to obtain adequate credit to maintain a viable farm operation. It will impact the manner in which banks conduct their agricultural lending activities. Furthermore, this Member has received many contracts from his constituents supporting the extension of Chapter 12 bankruptcy because of the situation now being faced by our nation's farm families. It is clear that the agricultural sector is hurting and by a permanent extension of the Chapter 12 authorization, Congress can avoid one more negative possibility.

Lastly, this Member supports the provision in the conference report of H.R. 333 which requires that people convicted of a felony or who owe a debt from a securities fraud violation in the five years before filing for bankruptcy cannot claim an unlimited homestead exemption. Currently, there are only six states, including Texas and Florida, which provide unlimited bankruptcy protection for a person's home. Nebraska is not one of those six states as it has a maximum homestead exemption of $12,500. This Member believes that this provision in the conference report is imperative in light of the recent corporate scandals at Enron and WorldCom. For example, this provision would apply to the $7 million penthouse in Houston of Kenneth Lay, the former chairman of Enron, if he both files for personal bankruptcy in the future and owes a debt due to any conviction of securities fraud. In addition, this provision may also be relevant to Scott D. Sullivan, the former chief financial officer of WorldCom, who is building a $15 million mansion in Boca Raton, Florida.

In closing, for these aforementioned reasons and many others, this Member urges his colleagues to support the conference report of H.R. 333.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I support the Bankruptcy Conference Report. I know there has been deliberation about the effect of section 330 of the bill on anti-abortion protests. But I believe section 330 will have little practical effect. And the rest of this bill will have an overwhelmingly positive impact on the bankruptcy system.

Section 330 does not penalize any lawful behavior. It will apply only if a person violates the law, a court enters an award against that person, the person later files a non-chapter 13 bankruptcy and seeks to discharge a debt based on their unlawful activity, and the creditor pursues the matter.

It does not apply only to abortion-related protests, but also to unlawful protests aimed at the providers of any lawful good or service.

The compromise reached in conference on this issue also contains very stringent requirements that should prevent any innocent protesters from being included in these provisions.

Moreover, this bill will curb bankruptcy abuse and protect consumers. It will also address the loophole in current law that allows debtors in certain states with unlimited homestead exemptions to shield an almost unlimited value of their homes from their creditors.

In order to game the system, some debtors move to a state with an unlimited homestead exemption just before they file for bankruptcy in order to take advantage of that state's more generous homestead protections.

H.R. 333 closes this loophole by requiring a debtor to reside in a state for at least two years before that debtor can claim the state's homestead exemption. In addition, a debtor must own the homestead for at least forty months before they can claim the state's homestead exemption protections.

H.R. 333 will stop corporate thieves from hiding their homestead assets from those whom they have defrauded. It will cap a debtor's homestead exemption at $125,000 if the debtor was convicted of a felony, if the debtor violated a securities law, or if they engaged in any criminal act, intentional tort, or reckless misconduct that caused serious physical injury or death to another individual.

Homeownership strengthens the fabric of our society. It's the American dream—and over 70% of Americans are living it. Owning a house gives individuals and families a place to call home, where they can arise their children and become active participants in their neighborhoods and communities.

Since 1867, federal lawmakers have recognized the role of the states in determining appropriate homestead exemptions.

States are in a much better position to determine an appropriate exemption—they can more closely examine the factors that differ from state to state, such as property values, real estate inflation, and even demographics.

The balance between states' rights and the federal government is important. Any abuses of the homestead exemption can and should be addressed by the individual states themselves.

In Texas, the homestead exemption is embedded in the state constitution to prevent the sale of one's home to repay debts, except in three specific cases: when there is a debt for the purchase of a home, a debt to finance the improvements to the home, or a debt for property taxes or federal income and estate taxes.

The homestead exemption provisions were among the most contentious in the conference and I am pleased we were able to reach a compromise on this issue. The compromise we reached will prevent 'bad actors' from abusing the homestead exemption without punishing those who legitimately belong in bankruptcy.

The overwhelming majority of people who declare bankruptcy do so because they have no other choice. Bankruptcy law is intended to give debtors a fresh start, not to punish them. Less than one percent of bankruptcy debtors abuse the bankruptcy press. This bill will address those 'bad actors' while retaining the goal of giving sincere debtors a fresh start.

I strongly support this conference report and I urge my colleagues to support it, as well.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 172, nays 243, not voting 17, as follows:

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed a bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3156. An Act to provide a grant for the construction of a new community center in St. Paul, Minnesota, in honor of the late Senator Paul Wellstone and his beloved wife, Sheila.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 5063, ARMED FORCES TAX FAIRNESS ACT OF 2002

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 609 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 609

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5063) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide a special rule for members of the uniformed services in determining the exclusion of gain from the sale of a principal residence and to restore the tax exempt status of death gratuity payments to members of the uniformed services, with the Senate amendments thereto, and to consider in the House, without intervention of any point of order, a single motion offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or his designee that the House concur in each of the Senate amendments with the respective amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. The Senate amendments and the motion shall be considered as read. The motion shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee on Ways and Means. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to final adoption without intervening motion or demand for division of the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER), pending which I yield myself such time as I might consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 609 provides us the opportunity to take H.R. 5063, with the Senate amendments, and to consider without intervention of any point of order a motion offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means or his designee. The motion provides the opportunity for the House to concur in each of the Senate amendments with the amendment that has been printed in the Committee on Rules report accompanying this resolution. The rule also waives all points of order against consideration of the motion to concur in the Senate amendments with amendments, and it provides 1 hour of debate in the House equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 609 provides that the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the motion to final adoption without intervening motion or demand for division of the question.

Mr. Speaker, as we prepare to complete the work of the 107th Congress and take H.R. 5063 from the Speaker's table, there are a couple of items of importance that will be inserted in this vehicle that the House will now have the opportunity to support following the adoption of this rule.

First, the amendments provide for a full extension through March 31, 2003, of current funding and program rules in the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program and the Child Care, Abstinence Education, and Transitional Medical Assistance programs.

In 1996, the creation of the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program fixed block grants for State designated programs of time-limited and work-conditioned aid to families with children. It also created a mandatory block grant to States for child care for low-income families, funded through fiscal year 2002. While the first continuing resolution passed by the House in September extended these programs through December 31, 2002, the CR passed by the House this week further extended those programs through the date of January 11, 2003. Unfortunately, in terms of the feasibility of approving funding for these programs through January 11 of next year, it makes much more programmatic sense for us to provide funds to the States on a quarterly basis and therefore extend the funding and program rules through an entire quarter to March 31, 2003.

Second, the amendment extends federally funded temporary unemployment benefits of current recipients and those in high unemployment States through January of 2003. In brief, this amendment will extend unemployment benefits for up to an additional 5 weeks per individual by moving the cutoff date to February 1, 2003. I believe that the House and Senate will eagerly support this provision that provides supplementary weeks of employment benefits to over 800,000 persons across the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule and the subsequent motion to be offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for yielding me the customary half hour, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to come to the well today to congratulate my colleagues for crafting a measure in the nick of time that addressed the real need in the communities. But like the vast majority of the legislation emerging from the 107th Congress, this is a pitiful stopgap measure that in the end will benefit far fewer than the rhetoric from the other side of the aisle suggests. I wish the unemployed had the lobbying might of the credit card companies who are enjoying the consideration of a last minute bankruptcy bill that will hammer our most vulnerable constituents, or even the insurance companies at the moment being blessed with a last minute measure to absolve them of liability in the event of future attacks, but the unemployed do not have the attention of the majority party and we do not believe they ever will.

The measure before us today is woefully inadequate when it comes to addressing the needs of our Nation's unemployed workers. I would note that these are newly unemployed workers, those that have paid into the system in the event of an economic slowdown. Mr. Speaker, the economy has not hit a soft patch. It is in a recession. Moreover, the money these workers paid into the system is there. They are workers who paid into the system when times were good and are now in need when the economy is rough. Why put obstacles in front of working families that need this aid? Indeed, most of our constituents will not qualify for an additional 13 weeks of benefits in this bill.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members are advised to turn off their cell phones.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. In my district close to 60,000 people remain unemployed due to a slowing economy. This measure will do little or nothing to alleviate the suffering of these families, and these statistics do not include the news this week that Eastman Kodak will cut 650 more jobs in my district or that Frontier Telephone will cut an additional 100 from its ranks almost immediately, before Thanksgiving Day.

In New York since the enactment of temporary Federal legislation in March of this year, the unemployed workers have been able to qualify for federally funded benefits which in New York can last up to 13 weeks, but this program is proving wildly inadequate for New York. Exceptionally large numbers of workers are running out of Federal benefits before they find new employment. The severity of the exhaustion problem reflects the State's shaky labor market, and I wish I could say that New York was alone, but my colleagues know better. The measure before us not only fails to make necessary improvements to the program, it fails even to extend the program in its current form. In the vast majority of States, it would provide no additional weeks of federally funded unemployment benefits to the workers who have already exhausted their regular, State unemployment benefits and cannot find work.

Under this proposal large groups of unemployed workers who will need additional weeks of unemployment benefits before job growth picks up would go without any further assistance. Between now and the end of January, an estimated 1.8 million jobless workers in need of assistance would fail to receive it under the majority plan.

This body could do much better. My colleague from New York (Mr. RANGEL) introduced legislation H.R. 5491 that would extend temporary Federal unemployment assistance for an additional 6 months through June 30, 2003. This measure would ensure that workers in every State are eligible for 26 weeks of extended unemployment benefits, and in States with high unemployment, like New York, workers would receive an additional 7 weeks of benefits. But it goes without saying that the measure before us today cannot be amended, and any meaningful consideration of the measure of the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) would be shut out under this rule.

I need to clarify another point for my colleagues. The House action report today indicates that Texas, New York, and California would be deemed "high unemployment States" under the chairman's bill, but according to the minority Committee on Ways and Means staff, that is not correct. The bill contains no expansion of the definition to allow States other than three, Alaska Washington, and Oregon, to qualify.

The problem with the current formulation which is fixed in the bill of the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) is that classification as a high unemployment State is based on the insured unemployment rate, which does not include long-term unemployment.

Thus, workers who receive the 13-week extension provided for in last year's tax bill, over and above the initial 26 weeks, are dropped from the calculation. So the formula is not a true measure of the unemployment situation in a State. States with long-term unemployment that exhausted their benefits are simply out of luck.

Another provision of this measure represents a case of too little too late. The Medicare/Medicaid reimbursement provision purports to temporarily address the controversy surrounding physician payments, but our Nation's hospitals are left out of the fix. Again, many of my colleagues I suspect are hearing from hospitals about their critical needs, and this measure will not alleviate their struggles.

Mr. Speaker, if the previous question is defeated, I will offer an amendment to the rule. Unlike the language in the bill which indemnifies the administration if it chooses to adjust Medicare physician payments, my amendment both protects beneficiaries from the harmful effects of physicians dropping out of the program and guarantees a payment increase for physicians.

Other Medicare providers, including hospitals, home health agencies and nursing homes that provide essential services to seniors and the disabled would be helped. The amendment ensures that all these providers have the resources needed to continue caring for their beneficiaries. This is about a bipartisan initiative which includes the House Republican provider package from earlier this year.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a "no" vote on the previous question so we can offer this important amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that with the overwhelming Republican victory in the House and Senate and a Republican President, that this would be an ideal time to see whether or not we can at least ease the need for the partisanship we had had in the past and to see whether or not we could get some basic things done for the country and plan better for the future of how we are going to work in the Congress.

I guess the major thing that we have to do is just talk with each other and maybe not go through the process of having hearings and going to the committees and all of that formality, but at least to be able to alert people as to how you would like to close out this Congress.

So we are adding to the Military Tax Fairness Act, that no one could be against except communists, some pretty good measures. One is to give some relief to our stopgap extension for the funding of welfare. It is small. We do not know where we are going or what we are going to do, but there is no sense letting the poor folks suffer for our confusion, so moving on that at a later date makes a lot of sense since you could not complete it this year.

The unemployment benefit extension to me only gives relief to three States, Oregon, Washington and Arkansas, and does not come anywhere near acting as though we are addressing the ever-increasing unemployment, especially in my State; and I wish we would have done something with that.

I guess the major hurdle that we have to overcome, and one of the reasons why I am opposing the rule, is because no one has explained the creativity of how we are going to give assistance to Medicare physicians. I assume that Republicans on the Committee on Rules already know what this means; and just maybe, just maybe, they might explain how we can pay Medicare doctors and forget all of the other providers.

Now, it was explained to me that we do not have the money to pay anybody else and that the administration would pay the Medicare doctors, and if they did pay the Medicare doctors, that this would say that the administration cannot be sued. Now, I know some smart people are trying to figure this out.

First of all, I do not know who is going to sue the administration; but if you are giving them some type of amnesty for paying the Medicare doctors, then the same legal creative mind that is going to spare the administration for doing the right thing for paying the doctors should have them do the right thing to pay for Medicare, and we will not sue them; to pay for the nursing homes, and we will not sue them; to pay for the teaching hospitals, and we will not sue them.

So I do not know where we are going with this. But I would hate in the last few hours of this Congress to end up providing a fig leaf for the administration, when we know they are not thinking about doing anything illegal. So if they can do this without the Congress, let them do it and take care of the needs of the other people, because our hospitals are suffering; and I just do not know why we are rifle-shooting the Medicare physicians and just ignoring the health maintenance organizations and their needs.

So I expect as soon as I sit down that someone might explain this to me, and maybe, just maybe, we might be able on the previous question to change these things so we can leave together, not as Democrats and Republicans, but as a Congress who could not complete their work on time and is just trying to get something done that we are proud of when we go home.

But I think the best way to do this is to defeat the rule and to come back with something that I really think would make us feel a little more proud of who we are.

I thank the gentlewoman for this opportunity; and I look forward to hearing from the majority, especially now that the chairman of the committee, he has not spoken to me since we have been back, but I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate him and hope we can set a new tone here, and I think just by explaining why we are not suing the administration for just singling out Medicare physicians, when we ought to sue if they ignore the rest of the people that deserve some type of assistance.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York said he wished somebody could explain it to him. I think somebody will.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

First of all, I want to thank my friend. This is, as we sometimes have to do at the end of a session, dealing with some mistakes that were made, both intentionally and unintentionally.

As far as the tenor for the welfare renewal, in the continuing resolution the language that was assumed to have fixed the problem provided by the appropriators does not, and what we are doing is making sure that the program at least extends through March.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I have no problem with that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, on the unemployment, as the gentleman well knows, there is a cliff that is going to occur because of the expiration of the unemployment provisions on December 28. We have had debates about how long it should be and in what form it should be. This at least provides those who are getting the unemployment, who are expecting their 13 weeks, to be able to get the 13 weeks.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, he did not go nearly far enough, but I could hardly vote against it. The interesting part is going to be this part.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, there is no guarantee that the administration will do anything. The difficulty in trying to move at this time those kinds of things that we call provider packages is that what is an appropriate provider package is in the eye of the beholder; and in trying to negotiate what it is that we are going to do, it is simply an impossibility.

What we are aware of is that in one particular approach, which is the physician reimbursement structure, plugged numbers were put in for 1998 and 1999. They do not accurately reflect the number of cases that physicians were involved with.

It is possible that the administration would change those numbers. There is no guarantee that they would change the numbers, but they are concerned that if they did go in and put actual numbers in place of plugged numbers, someone may entertain a suit to go back into the 1990s or the 1980s and say this number was not an actual number, and we want to sue you to make that change.

So all this provision does is provide legal protection, that if the administration does decide to make an adjustment, that is, use real-world numbers now known rather than the plugged numbers, they would not be subject to lawsuits if they did not make additional changes.

Now, that means that all we are doing is creating an opportunity for the administration to make a decision if they so choose to do so. That does not mean that this in any way adequately addresses the needs of many other providers. But there is no other provider group that the administration could make adjustments from plugged numbers to real numbers, as in this particular case. It requires the investment of money to be addressed to those various groups, be they hospitals, skilled nursing facilities, home health care or others.

This is not about providing money to fix one group's problem versus another; it is to create an atmosphere in which, if the administration chooses to do so, they would be able to do so, and the cost would then be borne by the administration, not by the legislative branch. When we come back then at the beginning of the next Congress, we would address, as we normally do, those provider groups for which we would have to provide the finances to assist them.

So all this does is put in place a legal protection, so that if the administration does choose to adjust those numbers, they would not be required through any kind of a court case to adjust any other number.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would yield further, I do not doubt the good intent that the gentleman has in providing some moneyless way, some way that we do not have any financial obligation to pay for it, to give relief to the Medicare physicians. But I might suggest that you are opening up Pandora's box with hospitals, nursing homes, Medicaid. I do not know why you would just go to this, just because we have not been able to address the problems of the people that are waiting for help. All of these hospitals are calling Members all over wondering for what reason are we singling out Medicare physicians for what they might call special treatment. If Members are so sophisticated that they are going to say this is an entitlement that is completely in the hands of the administration and it is just a question of which numbers they are going to use, but we are now going to hold them harmless in case they make a mistake, then I really do not think that this is the way that we should go.

I had hoped, and I do hope, that this is the end of the type of procedure that we have that the minority finds out what you are up to when the bill comes out. But maybe we can conclude by taking this off the calendar, seeing what can be worked out and start getting ready to start the new Congress on a different footing. I think some of these things could be adjusted. But it seems like this is a monkey wrench in the whole darn thing.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, it sounds to me the gentleman is offering the classic argument of because it is not perfect, it should be opposed. It seems to me that if there is an ability to correct a mistake and that the administration simply wants legal protection to correct that mistake, that we ought to be able to do that.

If the gentleman says others are not being provided for adequately, I would be the first to agree with the gentleman; and that is the first order of business. But no one else can be taken care of unless we go through those weeks and months of negotiations of what a package should look like.

So I would simply say, in returning my time to the gentleman who was kind enough to yield it to me, if in fact using real-world numbers and providing the administration some legal protection from being sued because they did not do something else other than putting in real-world numbers is going to be something that someone opposes, it is amazing the point that we have come to.

If others could be resolved this way, we would be doing others. Just because this particular problem could be resolved and others cannot does not mean that one should be in opposition to resolving this particular problem.

We will deal with the others when it is timely and appropriate, because we will have to negotiate and put dollars on the table to solve other providers' problems. This is one in which the administration is merely asking for legal protection, and I think we ought to provide it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. McGOVERN).

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this rule. I would urge a "no" vote on the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, this bill was brought before the Committee on Rules in the dead of night without any committee consideration. I am on the Committee on Rules, and we in the minority did not have a chance to review the legislative language even before we reported this rule. In fact, there was nobody present in the Committee on Rules last night that could answer any questions about the substance of this bill and, for that matter, the other bills that were brought before our committee. I think that on process alone this bill should be defeated.

Now, the majority claims that this bill will prevent people from losing their welfare benefits, from losing their unemployment compensation, and will allow the administration to fix the reimbursement problem. That is a tall tale if I have ever heard one.

The extension of the unemployment compensation is minimal. Because of the weak language in the bill, the House will have to address these issues again in January. I suppose one could make the argument that this is better than nothing, but not much more than that.

The so-called physicians' reimbursement fix is not a solution. There are problems with Medicare that began with the implementation of the BBA-mandated cuts on October 1, 2002. The majority may claim that this bill allows the majority to fix the physicians' reimbursement deduction, but it does not directly fix it. Nor does it address the cut in reimbursements for home health agencies, nursing homes, hospitals, and individual medical services.

Mr. Speaker, this is a last ditch attempt of the majority to pretend like they are doing something for the American people but, quite frankly, the American people deserve much more than this.

Now, at the conclusion of debate on this rule, the minority will call for a vote on the previous question. If the previous question is defeated, we will offer an amendment that will include real relief from the BBA-mandated cuts.

This House should not adjourn without providing real Medicare relief, but this bill does not provide that relief.

So I would strongly urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the previous question, defeat the rule, and support real Medicare relief that will benefit all of our seniors.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON).

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I want to remind my colleagues in the House that actually we passed a payer package to address the problems in the home health industry, the nursing home industry, the hospital industry, and the physician industry. We not only passed provider reforms, but we passed reforms that would be effective for 3 years so there would be stability in the medical community and our providers would be able to meet the challenges of this current period of difficulty with greater certainty. As to Medicare reimbursements in a period when malpractice insurance is rising by leaps and bounds, in a period when nursing costs are rising, when drug costs are rising, when blood costs are rising, it is really important for us to at least guarantee to our providers payment stability, as we did in the provider package that passed this House before the July recess and must do again before many months pass.

It is unfortunate that the other body has been unable to agree on a provider package and is still unable to negotiate on that package. If that were not the case, we would have a package before us here today.

As that is the case, it is extraordinarily important that we pass this clarifying language that merely clarifies current law, protecting against administrative review to the fiscal year calendar charges as well. So this is just a clarification of current law, and we believe that if that is done, the administration will be able to make adjustments as they have in many, many other instances. The fundamental problem is the underestimate of the number of Medicare patients that were going to move to the Medicare+Choice plans. Since not as many moved as were anticipated, those patients continue to see physicians. But we stopped paying the physicians for those patients.

So this is a very simple matter. It gives the administration just the opportunity to evaluate their own formulas and make similar kinds of reviews of them. It does not guarantee anything; it just assures that the current language that has worked in many situations in the past will have the opportunity to work at this time. And, of course, as my colleagues well know, physicians are declining to take additional Medicare patients; they are declining to even convert patients. And if, in fact, physicians do begin to participate, either fewer physicians or the current physicians at a lower level of participation, it will affect access to hospitals for our senior citizens and access to office care.

So it is a very important matter for our big medical centers as well as for our smaller hospitals and for our physicians; in other words, for seniors' access to health care, that we pass this bill this evening. And in addition, of course, it does extend unemployment compensation benefits after December 31, and that alone should be cause for the support of my colleagues. It also makes a more rational extension of TANF and therefore will allow the States to go forward and get their quarterly allocation to maintain a consistent program over the next quarter.

Again, this House passed a TANF reform bill many, many months ago, and if the other body had acted, we would not be in the situation we are in this evening. I urge support of this limited but important legislation.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER).

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I support H.R. 5063 with regard to unemployment extension and the TANF measures, and I agree that we need to address the problem facing our Nation's physicians. But there are other health care providers who are in just as dire straits, hospitals, home health, nursing homes and others.

We have in Tennessee, particularly in the rural areas now, hospitals operating in the red, laying off nurses; we have elderly citizens that cannot get home health care services. What we are trying to do when asking for Members to vote against the previous question is to allow us to bring up a bill, H.R. 5729, that includes the package of provider reimbursements or provider help that the Republicans passed in H.R. 4954 earlier this year and is within the budget. This seems to me to be imminently reasonable and fair to all of the providers across the board. It recognizes that we have a serious problem in the country.

Should we be able to defeat the previous question, we would then be able to insert into this procedure the House-passed bill, H.R. 4954, with the provider package for all health care providers.

I would urge as we debate this that we do that and point out that we in no way are trying to jeopardize the passage of the provisions with regard to unemployment and TANF that are in here and that are necessary, nor the physicians, but to recognize that people other than physicians in the health care delivery industry in this country are in just as dire straits, and it seems to me to be an imminently reasonable thing for us to do.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TANNER. I yield to the gentlewoman from Connecticut.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, if we followed the course of action that the gentleman is suggesting, and no one would like to do that more than I; I think we have to address all of these issues; that is what we did in the payer package and that is what we have to do in the beginning of January. But if we follow the course of action the gentleman is suggesting, the Senate simply will not go along and then we will leave this place with nothing done.

The physicians uniquely suffered a 5 percent cut last year, and if there is anything we can do to enable the administration to follow ordinary administrative procedures to prevent an additional cut, we should do it. We do not know this will work, but we do know, because we have been trying, that the Senate will not agree to a package and we have not been able to negotiate that package.

So if we follow the gentleman's proposal that we come back with his package to recommit, they will just not accept it, and we will be nowhere. That is what has happened ever since July. Since July, we are nowhere, even though we did our part. We passed a payer package. If they had sent anything over, if they had sent the merest dribble over, we would be able to negotiate a package. I am sorry to have taken the gentleman's time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GANSKE).

Mr. GANSKE. Mr. Speaker, in Iowa, the pediatricians, the obstetricians, the family practitioners rank 47th, 48th and 50th in terms of reimbursement for Medicare. With the cuts in physician payments, many of them are making decisions not to accept any new Medicare patients, and many are actually making decisions to drop out of Medicare.

This comes about because there was a faulty formula for a couple of years, and what we are dealing with now is the opportunity to at least allow the administration to look at this. This does not mean that other providers will not be taken care of in a package. But we tried to put together a balanced package earlier in the year when we were dealing with prescription drugs, and we just did not get it done in the other body in order to go to a conference to work it out.

Just because we cannot do everything, as has already been stated, does not mean we should not do something or at least allow the administration the opportunity to do that. This is not unique to Iowa. We are seeing this in many, many other places around the country. This is a result of a flawed formula, and it would be my plea to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to allow this minimal provision to simply prevent a lawsuit from occurring from a disaffected other provider group.

I would make an argument that if the administration would do something on this, that it would actually be to the benefit of the other provider groups early next year, because it actually removes one of the players from the table and, I think, then increases the bounty on that table for the other providers. This is a rather unique situation and I would ask my colleagues to support the rule and also the bill.

Finally, since this will be the last time I speak on this floor, I just want to thank my colleagues from both sides of the aisle. I have made a lot of friendships here in the House and I will treasure them forever.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that I support the bill before us today, but I urge opposition to the previous question for the reasons of which the gentleman from Tennessee amplified on a moment ago.

The frustration that many of us have felt over the last 6 months, as the gentlewoman spoke of a moment ago about the Senate, the time is limited now in which this body can blame the other body for not acting. Unfortunately, the bill before us is not going to get acted on either and yet we are going to set up one last time in which we are going to have the blame game in which we can point to somebody else for us not doing our work.

If the previous question is voted down, then we can take care of nursing homes, hospitals, home health care, and other health care providers exactly like the majority side said we should do it that was included within the budget this year. Nothing changes regarding what was passed in the House if we vote down the previous question.

□ 1800

All of the good things in this bill, all of the other things are in. It has just as good a chance of passing as the simplified, watered-down bill we have tonight.

It is unfortunate we have gotten ourselves into this position; but we have, for all the reasons, many of which were very successful politically. But that does not help the rural hospitals in my district. That does not help the one-third of the nursing homes in the State of Texas that are now in bankruptcy, and another one-fourth that are hanging on bankruptcy if we do not act, and act sooner, not later.

Excuses and finger-pointing are not going to get the job done. All we encourage is a vote against the previous question so we can send the package to the Senate, to the other body, that will do exactly what the majority wanted to do and a lot of folks on this side of the aisle also wanted to get done.

But Members should not deceive themselves that they are going to accomplish this with a finger-pointing exercise today. I encourage a vote against the previous question, allow the Tanner amendment to then come immediately back with everything, and then let us see whose fault it might be.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from New York for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, it is really nice that we can end this session with one more act from the Republican economic follies. I mean, this is the craziest piece of legislation I have ever seen, and this rule is an amazingly stupid rule.

They bring a bill out here for equity for the veterans, right? Oh, well, now we are here, let us throw a little something on for the doctors. While we are here, let us throw a little something on for unemployment.

We had extended hearings on this issue. Our committee went over and over again and heard about all the problems. Like heck we did; there were no hearings. They come out here with Band-Aids again, and everybody on this floor knows this bill is going to die. This is nonsense. It is not going to go over to the Senate and be accepted. But as my dear friend, the gentleman from Texas, said, they want to play the blame game.

Now, unemployment is a serious issue. What they are doing in this bill is not going to fix the unemployment problem. I will give chapter and verse when we get on the substance. But the fact that they will not allow us to put any kind of amendments up here is the reason why this bill is no good, and it is what they have been doing for a whole year.

They have known that the doctors were being taken around the corner and beaten up for 5 percent. They have known that for 9 months. They are not smart enough to put together something with the other side to get it through. Now here they are at the last day and saying, well, Thanksgiving is coming, Christmas is coming, send them another package; but they are not putting any stamps on it. It is never going to get through this place.

That has got to stop. These are issues that affect Democrats and Republicans; it is not partisan. Doctors, rural hospitals are Democrat and they are Republican. As long as they try and fix the problem by coming out here and slapping one, two, three Band-Aids on to fix what they should have done, it will not work.

The unemployment bill was badly written in the first place, and we begged them to come and do something about it. What do they do? Extend it for another 5 weeks. They say, well, another 5 weeks. The long-term unemployment in this country is going up dramatically. We ought to vote this rule down and write a decent one.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that is one of the gentleman's more interesting bits of prose. I suppose there is a kernel of thought lurking in it, but I did not detect it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. DEFAZIO).

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the Republican leadership has taken care of their colleagues in the Congress. There is going to be a tidy COLA made available to Members of Congress that will far exceed 6 months' worth of unemployment benefits for most Americans. In this bill, all they could find room for was a 5-week extension.

I have to admit, coming from the State of Oregon, with the second-highest unemployment rate in the Nation, with 2,500 people a week exhausting their benefits, that that is better than nothing. Those families now know that through Christmas and the holidays they will not be totally cut off. However, it creates an incredible amount of uncertainty for those families come the end of January.

We cannot do better than that? We can give ourselves a COLA for 12 months that far exceeds any benefits they can ever expect under unemployment, but somehow we cannot give them the certainty of another 26 weeks? I do not understand that. I really do not understand that position in this House. Why are we so stingy when it comes to working people, and so generous when it comes to insurance companies and the pharmaceutical industry? It might have something to do with who funds our campaigns.

This provision of this bill is essential, but it is nowhere near enough. Congress will be immediately confronted upon returning in early January with the issue of further extending unemployment benefits and, hopefully, adopting an effective economic stimulus package.

We simply need to put America back to work. We have a trade policy that is exporting jobs, and we are being told that trickle-down will help stimulate the economy and put people back to work; but my people are tired of being trickled on. They need Federal investment. We need something that puts them back to work.

We are holding back money from the Highway Trust Fund. That will put people back to work. We cannot get a bill passed to deal with the forest fire projects which could put people back to work in the woods. We do not have time for that, but we do have time for some other special shenanigans around here.

Mr. Speaker, I will support the legislation; but I bemoan the fact that Congress sees fit to take care of itself first, its contributors second, and the working people of America last in a very, very, very cursory way that is only temporary.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. WU).

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, thousands and thousands of Oregonians who have worked hard, played by the rules, frequently gotten a good education, and worked hard all their lives are currently without work. Many of them will be losing their unemployment benefits on December 28.

The legislation before us is hardly a perfect piece of legislation, but it will get a lot of folks over the hump until we can come back to this piece of legislation in the new congressional session. I hope that we will be able to do that.

I have legislation before this Chamber, H.R. 5731, which would not only extend the unemployment assistance benefit program, it would also extend the period of time in which any individual could receive assistance. I think that is a very necessary step to take at this point.

There are two kinds of folks, at least, who are hurting out there. I have seen so many of their faces as I have gone around communities in Oregon and in my town hall meetings. They are people who have exhausted their benefits, their 26 weeks' worth; and they are folks who, without an extension of this program, would not receive any assistance whatsoever. We need to help both groups, and I hope that we are able to come back in the new Congress and address the needs of both groups.

However, tiding one group over through the holidays I believe is a necessary step. I do intend to support the legislation.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY).

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding time to me, and I thank her for her leadership in this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I agree, we should fix the physician fee schedule. We tried to fix it. We offered a pretty good one in the bill that was passed in this body earlier this year.

I can tell the Members this, this bill does not go far enough. Rural hospitals, nursing homes, long-term care facilities, and home health agencies are all in trouble in rural America. Our rural health infrastructure is crumbling. We suffer from a lack of nurses, doctors, skilled medical professionals.

We are losing the ability to provide health care to Medicare recipients because the reimbursement rates are so low, not only to the doctors but to the hospitals and the other providers. Rural hospitals in my district are struggling to keep their doors open and at the same time provide health care to our people.

It is time that we face this problem, deal with it in a responsible way, and stop playing the games that are being played like we are doing here tonight. We just passed a bill yesterday that reduces the amount of money that is spent on road construction, which does not make any sense at all. If there is one thing we know that helps the economy, it is constructing highways. It gives us not only immediate jobs, but long-term benefits. We are playing all these games with the American people.

I hope that the people that are supporting this today have to go and face these people that do not have any health care 2 years from now.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, if the previous question is defeated, and we will call a vote on that, I am going to offer an amendment to the rule. Unlike the language in the bill which indemnifies the administration if it chooses to adjust Medicare physician payments, my amendment both protects beneficiaries from the harmful effects of physicians dropping out of the program, and guarantees a payment increase for the physicians.

Other Medicare providers, including hospitals, home health agencies, and nursing homes also provide essential care to seniors and the disabled. The amendment ensures that all these providers have the resources needed to continue caring for the beneficiaries. This is a bipartisan initiative which includes the House Republican provider package from earlier this year.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a "no" vote on the previous question so that we can offer this important amendment, and ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment be printed in the RECORD immediately before the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GUTKNECHT). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will agree that this is not the best we can do, but it is the best we can do at this hour. I would agree that it is perhaps true that the other body may not take it up and pass it, just like they have not passed other things we have passed. This bill going over there unpassed will have lots of company, but it is trying to do the right thing. It is trying to help with unemployment, it is trying to help with TANF, and it is trying to help with reimbursement. It is worth our consideration.

I urge this body to pass the previous question, to pass the rule, and I will support the underlying legislation.

Mrs. CHRISTENSEN. Mr. Speaker, although I have many problems with this bill, including the limited extension of unemployment, as well as the lack of relief for all providers of Medicare, I rise to support the rule and the underlying bill because this short extension is better than nothing, and it is likely all we can get right now.

I also support the bill and the rule because it addresses another very important issue affecting health care for countless Americans. It does what I have always thought was possible anyway, which is to clarify the authority of the Administrator of Center for Medicare and Medicaid Services to reverse the cuts, and hopefully revise the way provider payments for physicians are determined.

This is not a perfect solution, because Congress should have reversed the cut once and for all, but it may also help set a precedent for issues such as this in the future.

There were many measures I hoped would be passed and issues addressed in a lame duck session this year, and reversing the cuts in Medicare provider payments was one of the important ones. Health care providers have borne 4 cuts over the past 10 years and another cut is expected within two years. This Is in addition to the fact that the payment schedule, which barely allows doctors to keep their office open, was erroneously determined. This administration and CMS are forcing good doctors and other providers out of practice and denying quality health care to increasing numbers of Americans.

We have a lot more work to do to fix this broken health care system in this country, but because we are leaving to go back home tonight, we cannot do it now.

I hope my friends in the majority will commit themselves to doing more than this band aid fix when we return next year.

The text of the amendment previously referred to by Ms. SLAUGHTER is as follows:

At the end of the resolution, add the following:

Sec. . Notwithstanding any other provision of this resolution, the first amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules shall be modified by adding the text of H.R. 5729.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for electronic voting, if ordered, on the question of adoption of the resolution.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 207, nays 198, not voting 26, as follows:

Ms. HARMAN changed her vote from "aye" to "no."

Ms. BERKLEY changed her vote from "no" to "aye."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. GOODLATTE. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 480 I was inadvertently detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, today November 14, I was unavoidably detained and missed two rollcall votes numbered 479 and 480.

Rollcall No. 479 was a vote on ordering the Previous Question concerning the Rule for H.R. 5063. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

Rollcall No. 480 was on passage of H. Res. 609, the "Rule Providing for Consideration of the Armed Forced Tax Fairness Act of 2002." Had I been present I would have voted "yea" on H. Res. 609.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H. CON. RES. 507

Mrs. JONES of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of H. Con. Res. 507.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

REDUCING PREEXISTING PAYGO BALANCES

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 602, I call up the bill (H.R. 5708) to reduce preexisting PAYGO balances, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The text of H.R. 5708 is as follows:

H.R. 5708

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. Reduction of Preexisting PAYGO Balances.

Upon the enactment of this Act, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall reduce any balances of direct spending and receipts legislation for all fiscal years under section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 to zero.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 602, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) and the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE).

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in favor of the bill before us, H.R. 5708. It is a bill that would prevent the automatic spending cuts in Medicare and other entitlements.

Under the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990, entitlement and tax legislation must be offset on a year-by-year basis. We do this so that it will not increase the deficit or reduce the surplus. If such legislation is not offset, then automatic spending cuts, often called a sequester, are triggered in selected entitlement programs, including Medicare. This so-called pay-as-you-go rule, or what we refer to around here oftentimes as PAYGO, expired at the end of September; but the Office of Management and Budget is still required to trigger a sequester for previously enacted legislation.

On various occasions during which the Federal Government was running large surpluses, this Congress saw fit to depart from the PAYGO rule for selected measures. This was the case with the tax bill enacted last year. Similarly this year on both sides of the aisle, we have promoted initiatives to provide prescription drug benefit coverage under Medicare, and we also did so without offsetting entitlement cuts or tax increases.

But as we know, last year's recession and the shock of the terrorist attacks are still affecting our economy and have changed the budget outlook considerably. As a result, these and other such measures could trigger what we refer to as a PAYGO sequester several weeks after the Congress adjourns. Should we fail to enact this bill, the Office of Management and Budget has estimated that Medicare and other entitlements should be reduced by almost $125 billion in fiscal year 2003. Given various rules that exempt certain programs from sequestration, or that limit the size of any sequester, the maximum sequester would still be substantial, about $31 billion, all of which would have to be absorbed in 1 year.

The magnitude of these cuts would be so great as to cause a 4 percent reduction in certain Medicare payments and cuts ranging in the billions in such key programs as crop insurance, the Department of Defense health fund, payments to States for child support enforcement, veterans education and readjustment, and the September 11 victims compensation fund. With the other body unable to pass even a budget this year, we were obviously unable to reach an agreement on legislation to extend PAYGO and other budget rules. It is my hope that this can be done next year as part of a normal budget process.

I would close by reminding our Members and colleagues that the PAYGO rule contributed to the taming of deficits over the past 7 years, and it is my hope that a successor to PAYGO can be developed and coupled with caps on distressary appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, in short, what this bill does is prevents automatic spending cuts in Medicare and other entitlements. As we know in years past, particularly in years of surplus while the PAYGO rule was used, it was not a perfect rule because it suggested that tax cuts and entitlement reforms go on what we call the PAYGO scorecard. Every year in a very routinized way, the last bill has taken care of this concern in years of surplus. That would have been the intention this year. However, this controversy looms as a result of the fact that we have had this triple budget threat of a downturn in the economy, the terrorist attacks, and the war on terrorism.

Mr. Speaker, I believe all of us want to avoid Draconian cuts to Medicare and to other entitlements or to prevent tax increases in order to pay for this during a time of recession. What we need is a plan, and we have a plan. The House passed a plan. The President has endorsed that plan. If we stick to that plan, we can get back to surpluses, we can get back to fiscal discipline. But in the meantime, let us take this ministerial opportunity to take care of this unfortunate situation so that we can avoid something automatic happening while Congress is not in session.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

□ 1900

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, a year ago the Blue Dogs warned about the danger of making long-term commitments for tax cuts or new spending programs. We were concerned that the projections were based on unrealistic assumptions and that the projected surpluses could vanish as quickly as they materialized. We were concerned that the large tax cuts and increased spending would drive up the deficit and the national debt. Our warnings were ignored, and now we are told we will be borrowing virtually all of our Social Security surplus for the next decade and beyond.

After passing legislation that would rack up an additional debt of $127 billion next year alone, Congress is considering legislation that would wipe the slate clean to remove all those costs from the ledger. The bill before us wipes the slate clean not just for this year and next year but for each of the next 5 years, allowing us to avoid responsibility for legislation adding over $550 billion in new national debt.

I do not want to cut Medicare or veterans benefits, farm assistance, or child support enforcement. However, we object strongly to clearing the scorecard for the next 5 years, which allows Congress and the President to ignore the impact of legislation that will increase the deficit for the next 5 years without working to plan to stem the tide of red ink.

I agree with what the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) said a moment ago. This is not the time to be talking about spending cuts or tax increases. I agree. But why not in 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008? Why do we feel compelled tonight to say we are going to wipe the slate clean for the next 5 years when we have constantly and the motion to recommit tonight will allow us to do just that? The motion that the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) will offer will say we do not object to wiping the scorecard clean for 2002 and 2003. Obviously 9/11/01 has made a big change in the economics of this country. But let us sit down in the next Congress and let us work out the details of how we are in fact going to deal with these exploding deficits. Let us not exempt new tax cuts or new spending increases from the hard decisions that this body should be trying to make in order to bring our budget back under control. That is what we object to. I do not understand the rationale of why we need to do this for 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, and 2008. And I would be glad to yield to the chairman if he could answer that question because he made a very compelling argument a moment ago of why we should not do it now.

I do not want to cut Medicare right now. In fact, we need to do just the opposite. We do have to recognize the rationale of the situation we are in today, but why do we want to do it for these outyears? I do not understand that.

Just yesterday Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan reiterated the importance of restoring the budget enforcement rules for the Federal budget. We should not ignore the chairman's request of this body. "It's important for Congress and the administration to have a long-term budget structure which we continuously update and evaluate so that we have a mechanism to make judgments . . . relative priorities within the overall budget choice process or with respect to the economy . . . we need to get the process back to where it was. We need to reestablish the basic caps on discretionary spending, on PAYGO, introduce new things like triggers or other things which give us a vehicle to function with."

I believe the chairman has agreed with that in the past. I certainly do. Earlier this year Chairman Greenspan told the Committee on the Budget that failing to preserve budget enforcement rules would be a grave mistake. Tonight we are about to do just that. We are about to make a grave mistake saying we are going to waive all PAYGO rules, all discretionary caps, everything for the next 8 years in order to do what? Accomplish somebody's political agenda? Or are we going to seriously roll up our sleeves in the next Congress and deal with it?

Vote for the motion to recommit. Let us wipe the PAYGO slate clean for 2002 and 2003. Wipe it clean. We all will agree, but do not do it for 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008. That will not be a fiscally responsible thing for this House to do.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, while I certainly enjoy the philosophical discussion of budget process and budget enforcement with maybe the best of them, the fact of the matter is that this is a real vote and you are either going to vote yes to prevent automatic sequestration of Medicare or you are not. It is either a vote to allow OMB, or not even allow, to force OMB for automatic sequestration of Medicare or you are not. So a vote in favor of this bill prevents Medicare cuts. A vote against this bill or a vote even for that matter for the motion to recommit allows Medicare cuts, and it is that simple.

So we will have a lot of time to talk about budget process for many years, weeks, months to come, but the fact of the matter is that this is a real bill. It has real consequences, and therefore it should be passed.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS).

Mr. DAVIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the comments just made by the chairman of the Committee on the Budget. It is correct to say that probably every Member of this body is opposed to cutting Medicare spending to fund the effects of the tax cut whose size in retrospect was way too large given the condition of the economy and the cost to our country of maintaining security at home and abroad, but there is another point involved here in the motion to recommit, and this is what we need to debate.

We are not cutting taxes tonight or spending money. We are engaged in accounting. We just spent a year preaching to corporate America about the need to be open and honest to shareholders and investors and to the public about admitting when they were in deficit and doing the math correctly, and here we are tonight in direct defiance of that principle because what we are voting upon is whether we are going to be honest first with ourselves and then with the American people that we are in deficit spending and in balance only because we are relying upon the Social Security Trust Fund. Every Member of Congress who went home the last campaign campaigned upon fiscal responsibility, the virtues of balancing the budget and paying down the debt, and there are many Democrats and some Republicans that increasingly will argue for that. It has had benefits in terms of interest rates. It has benefits in terms of preparing Social Security and Medicare for the retirement of the baby boomers. One of the key principles that brought Democrats and Republicans together to balance the budget was the principle of pay as you go because pay as you go has meant, until today after this vote, that if you want to increase spending, Medicare or other discretionary spending under formulas or programs, or if you wanted to increase taxes, you had to pay as you go. You had to consider the impact that would have on the balanced budget, growing the deficit.

Tonight we are throwing those rules out. We are saying for the next 5 years, whether it is increased spending or additional tax cuts, we do not care what impact it has on the size of the deficit. We are going to dig deeper.

Let us think back to the things we said to corporate America and what we promised the people we represent. Let us have a direct, open, and honest debate tonight. Let us admit to ourselves we made a mistake in terms of the size of the tax cut. We need to come straight with the American public. It starts by coming straight with ourselves. Let us reinstate PAYGO starting the year after this. Let us vote for the motion to recommit because what the motion to recommit says, and my colleagues are going to hear this over and over again, is let us commit, let us make the President commit to a plan to get back to a balanced budget, to stop relying upon the Social Security Trust Fund. The motion to recommit says it is not going to happen tomorrow. We have got security problems we need to deal with. We have got funding at home we need to deal with, but we need to have a plan, and we need to be honest with the folks at home just as we said to corporations across America, we have got a problem, we have got a growing deficit and we are going in the right direction and not the wrong direction. It starts by reinstating the PAYGO principle. I would ask my colleagues, Democrats and Republicans, that care about fiscal responsibility and the growing budget deficit to vote for the motion to recommit.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I think that I want to caution my friends on the Democratic side do not get excited. You guys understand this President is in total control of this country, and he lied to us about taxes and now it is coming home to roost. Do not get exercised because you have got to save your voice. We are going to have 2 years of this stuff where they can do anything they want. This bill is simply giving them the keys to the hen house. The fox has now got it. He has got votes in the Senate, got votes in the House, and the President is going to send up stuff here and he does not have to balance any budget anymore.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). The Chair would respectfully rule that the gentleman not make such personal references to the President of the United States. The gentleman may proceed in order.

Mr. MCDERMOTT. But you all understand where it is coming from, do you not? I mean it is not falling out of the sky. This is a concentrated effort, and what they wanted to do was they wanted to give all those taxes away so there would be no money to deal with social programs, and now it happens and they are suddenly afraid. They were fools before. They were saying, well, you can give it all away and we do not have to worry. We will just stiffen our spine and when the people come in here begging, we will send them away. Then they suddenly found out that the people coming in here were veterans.

I mean we are going to war. We are going to create a whole bunch more veterans. Are we going to take care of them? Go to my veterans hospital and you will find out what they are doing right now. Or poor people, of course they do not count anyway. So never mind. Let them yell all they want. And education, well, what do we care about stooges? Let them pile on some more debt.

This is a blank check to the executive branch to write and spend endlessly. And an unfortunate chairman of the committee has to come out here and defend this all by himself. No one will come here and speak with him. He is the only one. They put him out there and they said you are the chairman, you go carry this and just take the lumps, it will not make any difference because down at the White House we will write up some stuff and we will spend on war, we will spend the $200 billion going to war in Iraq over the next 10 years. That is no problem. We can find that anywhere.

Let us see what else we can find. Oh, we have got to have that insurance for terrorism. Of course that will not cost anything. And in this bill that is coming up next they have got additional money for Medicare. Do my colleagues know what they did? They went down to CBO and they said CBO, do not score this, do not show it cost anything, so they can bring it out here and they can say it does not cost anything, CBO says there is no scoring.

I mean this game is rigged, and you are watching this game be rigged right in front of your eyes. This will be when you come back and want to balance the budget and you look for some rules, you gave them away on whatever this is, the 15th of November. Vote for the recommittal.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Again for the benefit of the Members, a yes vote is to follow the budget, follow our plan that we have put in place, and a no vote cuts Medicare, crop insurance, military health, child enforcement, veterans education, and the victims of September 11. It is that simple. Again, these are good discussions, nice philosophical arguments, but the facts are still the facts. If you vote for the motion to recommit, you are cutting Medicare. If you vote yes, you are allowing us to continue to follow the budget plan that has been put in place.

Mr. Speaker, I continue to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me make clear that the motion to recommit will wipe clean the scorecard, $125 billion on the scorecard this year. It will wipe it clean for 2003. It will only apply to the future and it will only require that the President give us a budget which shows some light at the end of the tunnel, a balanced budget by 2008. So for this year and next year, it will allow us the freedom of movement without being concerned about it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN).

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, this will probably be the last legislative item that I will debate in my House career; and it is ironic that, given that when I came here as a Member of the House we heard about how we had deficits as far as the eye can see, and, in fact, even before that when I was a member of the staff of this body back in the 1980s we went through a quadrupling of the national debt and we went through Gramm-Rudman I and Gramm-Rudman II, and we never could seem to get a handle on the deficit until 1990 with the Budget Control and Enforcement Act, and we imposed PAYGO and spending caps. Then we extended it in 1993. Then when I got here the Republicans extended in 1997. Then, lo and behold, we got control of the deficit, and we began to argue about how much public debt we could pay down.

Now, in the age of deficits again where we are going to have a $200 billion deficit in the current fiscal year, apparently, we are going to repeal all the rules. We might as well repeal the Unified Budget Act and go back to the pre-68 rules when we do not know what the real budget is, the Committee on Appropriations can spend what they want to, the Committee on Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce committee can spend what they want to, and at some point, at some point, the American people will pay the tab.

I am afraid that is where we are heading with this. I do not think this is where the chairman wants to go, but I understand he has to follow his orders. But how ironic, coming in when it was deficits as far as the eye can see, and we had a chance to pay down the debt and we started to do it, I leave on a note where once again it is deficits as far as the eye can see; and we are not doing anything to correct it. In fact, we are stepping on the gas to make it even worse.

I think we are going to regret this day for a long time when we see our national debt balloon far beyond anything this country has ever seen before, and I do not think there is any Member of this House who has an idea of how they are going to deal with it, particularly if they do this today. So I hope we will defeat this really unsatisfactory piece of legislation.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. PRICE).

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to recommit, which our distinguished colleague from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) will be offering.

Today's vote represents a fork in the road of Federal budgeting. We must decide whether to continue down the path of deeper budget deficits or to take those first difficult steps toward returning to a balanced budget.

The pay-as-you-go rule expired at the end of fiscal year 2002. However, PAYGO sequestration for prior laws extends through 2006. These PAYGO rules, which were adopted as part of the 1990 bipartisan budget agreement, have been crucial to the progress that we made during the 1990s to go from record budget deficits to budget surpluses, surpluses that let us retire $400 billion in the national debt.

With the help of PAYGO and statutory limits on discretionary spending, we were able to improve the bottom line of the budget for 8 consecutive years, culminating in surpluses for fiscal years 1998 through 2000. Unfortunately, the 10-year, $5.6 trillion surplus that was projected less than 2 years ago has almost disappeared, and the budget has fallen back into annual deficit.

Now more than ever, it is essential that we reaffirm our commitment to the budget tools that can help us restore budget discipline and return the Federal Government to a balanced budget. That is why I am disappointed that the Republican leadership has decided to bring to the floor legislation that would eliminate PAYGO sequestration for all future years to which the law applies.

Mr. Speaker, no one wants across-the-board cuts to Medicare or veterans' education or child support enforcement or other domestic priorities; and contrary to the assertion of the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, the motion to recommit would do no such thing.

The Republican solution, that we ignore the long-term budget deficits facing our Nation, will not make them go away. We should not ignore our budget problems; we should work to solve them.

The Spratt motion to recommit would avoid domestic spending cuts by clearing the PAYGO scorecard for 2002 and 2003. But unlike H.R. 5708, the Spratt motion would require the President to submit a budget that achieves balance within 5 years, excluding the Social Security trust fund surplus, before clearing the PAYGO scorecard for fiscal years 2004 through 2006. The motion to recommit would, therefore, hold Republicans and the President to their professed goal of achieving fiscal balance and protecting Social Security revenues in the process. To avoid future across-the-board cuts, the President would have to reverse course and move the budget back into surplus.

Mr. Speaker, for several months we have been urging the President to hold bipartisan budget negotiations to chart a path back to fiscal control. It is well past time for the President to present Congress with a budget that acknowledges the new fiscal realities confronting our Nation. I urge my colleagues to vote for the motion to recommit and to take the first steps toward restoring fiscal discipline to the Federal budget.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, this is not some type of rhetorical debating society we are having tonight or some philosophical argument. This is a group of Members who feel it is important enough to stand up in this body tonight to warn the American people about the disastrous fiscal course that this Congress and this administration have embarked upon, which is leading to exploding deficits again and an accumulation of a national debt at exactly the wrong moment in our Nation's mystery, when we have close to 80 million Americans, so-called baby boom generation, all marching lockstep to their retirement in a few short years; and the decisions that we need to make today to prepare the next generation to deal with that challenge are not being made. In fact, one of the fiscal disciplinary rules that has worked well to rein in spending, to maintain balance in our budgetary choices, they are seeking to waive over the next 5 years.

I think everyone agrees that this bill before us is a recognition of a failed budgetary policy of large tax cuts that were not paid for and new spending programs were not paid for. To avoid the inevitable across-the-board cuts with Medicare and veterans benefits and farm programs, we have to pass this legislation.

But I for the life of me do not understand why we cannot deal with the fiscal mess created this fiscal year, give them a little leeway in the next fiscal year, but then support a motion to recommit that calls upon the President to submit a balanced budget plan that leaves our hands and their hands off from Social Security surpluses in the following years so we have a chance to reverse the fiscal course that we have embarked upon.

What is different today than in the past is we do not have the luxury of the 1990s to bring the budget back into balance and to run surpluses to reduce the debt before the baby boomers start their retirement. It is now or never. We can be back next year having another philosophical debate, but at that time we are going to be much deeper in the hole; and I cannot think of anything more morally irresponsible than to leave the next generation with this mountain of debt for them to bail the country out of.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. POMEROY).

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, in 1990, President Bush, looking at runaway deficits, put his political career on the line, convened a bipartisan summit on the budget and produced some very important budget rules to get a handle on these out-of-control deficits. Perhaps the most important facets of those rules were pay-as-you-go requirements, requirements that if you spend more tax money, you have got to show where it is accounted for in the budget so you do not run the deficits deeper. If you cut revenue, you got to show where it is accounted for and reduce spending so you do not run those deficits deeper. Those pay-as-you-go requirements have been critical to getting us to a surplus.

Now we are once again dealing with another President and runaway deficits, and we are looking at a completely different response.

I have read with interest accounts of the majority in terms of their agenda for the Congress ahead: make the tax cuts permanent, add prescription drug coverage to Medicare. On the one hand you reduce revenue, on the other hands you increase spending. I am wondering how does all this add up? With this legislation we see they have no intention whatsoever of making it add up. They are going to do it on the deficit. They are going to run up the debt.

Now, the motion to recommit deals with every spending problem that the chairman has illustrated tonight, Medicare fraud programs, the like of it. But over the long term, can we not agree as Republicans and Democrats that this is not the decade to run government on the debt? Because next decade, as the baby boomers retire, expenses are inevitably going to go up, and go up significantly.

This will be the greatest self-indulgent act of the self-indulgent baby boom generation if we do not pay our way now and rely on the kids to bail out the debt that this will bring upon the country. There is not a family I represent that plans for their retirement by running up the debt with the hope that the children will pay for them in retirement. It is wrong for us to do it as a country. Let us reject this approach. Let us pass the motion to recommit.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the very distinguished gentleman who just spoke suggested that he read with interest our plan, and we all appreciate the fact that he did read with interest our plan. At least we have a plan to read. Since September 11, the Democrats in both bodies have yet to present a plan on how to deal with this.

We understand that you oppose our position. We understand that you oppose the President's plan. We understand that you oppose the direction that we have taken, and that is fine. You have a right to do so.

But I also believe if you are going to complain, you also need to propose; and as of yet, your side has yet to propose an alternative. That is why tonight we are forced to continue to go down the road that we are going, continue to follow the plan that we have put into place in the House, together with the President, and that is why tonight it is important for us to vote down the motion to recommit, which would not follow that plan, and allow this bill to pass so that we do not provide cuts in Medicare and crop insurance, which I know are important to the gentleman as well as to myself and our States, as well as to military health, child enforcement, veterans' education and the victims of September 11.

It is, again, not a philosophical discussion, as the gentleman from Wisconsin said. These are real issues that are going to affect people in a real way. We want to prevent the cuts from happening. As of yet, we see no plan on how to accomplish what you are demanding from the President, even from your side, not even an idea, not even a plan.

A few are bold enough to come down and say raise taxes. A few are bold enough to come down and say that entitlements should be increased. But, by and large, I have not seen anything that has gotten close to a majority of support from the Democratic side.

So I would suggest to the gentleman that while he reads with interest our plan, we wait with interest for yours.

Mr. SPRATT. I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. POMEROY).

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

I would just say in response to my friend from Iowa, the question I had about the gentleman's plan is how we pay for it. I see the revenue cuts, I see the spending increases, and the question I had was, How is this paid for?

I believe that by eliminating the budget rules, as you do in this resolution, the answer is clear: you have no intention of paying for it. You will pay for it on the debt that you will pass on to our children.

We would propose in our motion to recommit another way. Let us at least agree that by 5 years from now, by 5 years from now, on a bipartisan basis, we will be having plans to get us to a balanced budget and stop the debt on our children.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is asking how are we going to pay for it? We passed a budget. That is how we are going to pay for it.

But I guess my question is, How did you pay for your Medicare plan that you voted for which costs $1 trillion? How were you going to pay for that? Let me see here: POMEROY, POMEROY, why, my goodness, POMEROY is on here, without a budget. The gentleman from North Dakota voted for a plan that cost $1 trillion, and yet he has the audacity to come down and ask how I am going to pay for it?

Let me look at another one here. Let us see, tax cuts. Oh, I cannot believe the gentleman from North Dakota would have voted for tax relief. POMEROY. My goodness, he voted to reduce revenue, and he does not have a budget; and he comes down and asks me how I am going to do it?

The double standard here is amazing.

□ 1930

We have a plan. I know the gentleman does not like it. Fine. Vote no. That is fine. But realize that when the gentleman votes no tonight, he is voting no for seniors. He is voting no for farmers. He is voting no for folks who are veterans. He is voting no for people who rely on these programs. Go ahead and vote no. Knock yourself out. Have a great philosophical discussion. These are facts that the gentleman cannot avoid. That is what he is voting no on. So it is great that he gets to vote for these great programs, trillion dollar drug benefits that the gentleman does not pay for and tax cuts that are not paid for, but then he comes down here and complains about our budget. Come up with a budget, come up with a plan, come up with some ideas, and then come back and tell us why ours are wrong. Otherwise, just vote no tonight and suffer the consequences.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 seconds to the gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. POMEROY).

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Speaker, I would just say back to my friend, the gentleman from Iowa, the issue is over 5 years, can we not agree we ought to balance the budget? The gentleman's plan does not balance the budget, the plan runs up on the debt. The gentleman has run into the budget rules that require pay-as-you-go requirements and tonight he eliminates those budget rules. This is Katie-bar-the-door on deficit spending and the chairman of the Committee on the Budget owes a great deal of personal responsibility for this action.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER).

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, right now, I do not believe that the majority of the people in this country realize that we are in debt over $6 trillion; we are paying $1 billion a day in interest on consumption that we are either unwilling to make cuts to bring the budget into balance, or we are unwilling and do not have the courage to raise the revenue for a first class, world class military, a first class system of education, a health care system second to none.

Last year we ran a unified deficit of $159 billion. The statutory debt ceiling will probably have to be increased again next year, creating further incentive for Congress to borrow more money, and it is in this light we are asked to vote on a bill that throws out the PAYGO rules, and for erasing the $60 billion debt. We are here tonight because the PAYGO rules have failed. We are passing on more and more debt to our children. Those are the facts.

I would say to the gentleman from Iowa, my friend, you all are in control of this place, you are in charge, and all we are asking is that there be some plan put in place before we throw these rules out, these budgetary rules for 5 years, to at least get us, talk with us to get back to a plan that will let us get back in the black in 5 years.

Mr. Speaker, I came here in 1988 because our country was awash in red ink and, sadly, tonight, in 2002, we are back awash in a sea of red ink for as far as the eye can see. We are engaged in a generational mugging of the young people of this country on a scale that is massive and has never before been done, and we are unwilling, all of us, Democrats, Republicans, Independents, you name it, we are unwilling to face up to it. If my colleagues will not talk to us and bring these bills where we cannot even have a chance to sit down and say within the next 5 years can we not agree on a plan as Americans, not as Democrats and Republicans, as Americans with a moral obligation to those who follow. That is all we are asking for.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY).

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from South Carolina for yielding me this time, and I appreciate his leadership.

Mr. Speaker, I can tell my colleague this, I say to the gentleman from Iowa. He may think it is cute, he may think it is funny, he may think it is smart to stand over there and act like the Blue Dogs did not submit a plan. He may think that because he put a rule up here that would not let us put a plan on the floor to be voted on that he did something cute. But let me tell my colleague something. He can continue to be intellectually dishonest, he can continue to deceive the American people, but he is passing on a burden to our children and grandchildren, and I will not be a part of it, and he is going to answer for it one of these days, and he deserves it. But I can tell my colleague this: It is not cute. So when my colleague is over there making those smart remarks, just remember, it is not funny.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time to explain to everybody what is happening here.

In 1990, after years of trying to get our hands around the deficit, we finally had a budget summit with President Bush and we devised not only a 5-year plan for reducing the deficit, but we also passed something called a Budget Enforcement Act and it contained several new rules, budget process controls which have had a significant impact on our ability to get rid of the deficit.

In particular, we adopted a set of discretionary spending ceilings, a ceiling on discretionary spending, we adopted it in 1991, we renewed it in 1993, and we extended it in 1997, and that held discretionary spending to substantially lower rates of increase than the 1980s. We also adopted something called the pay-as-you-go rule, which said with respect to entitlement spending, if you want to liberalize the entitlement benefit or add a new one, you have to pay for it or you have to go through the catalog of all of the other entitlements and reduce the entitlement by enough to pay for the new one you are creating or an increase in the benefit that you are providing for. In addition, with respect to tax cuts, we said if you want a tax cut, it will have to be budget neutral. You can cut taxes one place, but you have to increase them elsewhere so the deficit is not worsened, or you can offset a tax cut with an entitlement cut so that once again it is budget neutral.

A lot of people at the time scoffed at these process changes on the grounds that we were just rearranging the deck chairs and they would not have any real results. One of those who was skeptical at the time was Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Fed. When he appeared before our committee this March, March 2, he said in response to my question, Congressman, I thought that whole set of rules had very little chance of working, and I was wrong. It really did matter, much to my surprise. The PAYGO rules, for example, have been extremely and always very useful. That is what the Chairman of the Fed said. He came back to us in September and repeated and said the same thing.

The gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE), the chairman of our committee, on June 27 acknowledged that the President was seeking an extension of the discretionary caps and the PAYGO requirement and implied that that needed to be done. I think he and I were in basic agreement on that.

What has happened is we never did it. I introduced legislation to that effect and it has never come to the floor of this place; we have never had a hearing on it. We have never done it. So we are here just before adjournment, the discretionary spending caps are gone in 2002. They are gone. The PAYGO rule has expired. It is gone. The 5-year budgets that we adopted in 1991 and 1993 and 1997 are gone. The last one ran out in 2002.

So all of the devices we had to control the budget that worked spectacularly well in the 1990s; we reduced the deficit from $290 billion when President Bush left office to $330 billion surplus in 2000. When President Bush came to office, the second President Bush came to office, unlike his father, we gave him a budget in surplus, $127 billion in surplus. It is gone, and the budget devices that worked so well to help us contain the deficit, reduce the deficit every year for 8 straight years in the 1990s are gone too, and there is no effort here to reintroduce them.

Now, there is one last vestige of the PAYGO rule. PAYGO required sequestration, across-the-board cuts. If you ignored the PAYGO rule and increased entitlements or cut taxes and therefore increased the deficit, there was a scorecard kept, and at the end of the year if that scorecard showed an excess amount on it, the law decreed across-the-board reductions in spending in selected accounts. We are now faced with that particular law for this year and for years to come, because even though the PAYGO rule has expired, it still applies as to existing law and future years.

This bill takes out that last vestige. We have done away with sequestration as to any future legislation, we have done away with the PAYGO rule and discretionary spending, no 5-year budget at all, it takes that last vestige. What it does, even worse, is it passes up the opportunity to take the legislation that we have offered to extend the PAYGO rule, to extend the authority for 5-year discretionary spending caps, to extend the authority for sequestration, to reinstall those budget disciplines, those process rules that got rid of the deficit in the 1990s, to reinstate them. This bill completely ignores that opportunity and simply wipes the slate clean.

So what is happening here? What is this all about? The purpose of this is to clear the way for the next session of Congress with no disciplines whatsoever; tax cuts as much as you want. There will be no restraints, no 60-vote margins in the Senate, no other restraints, no PAYGO rules that have to be waived, no scorecard, nothing. This takes away all of the discipline at a time when the budget is literally in free-fall.

We have a deficit that increases this year to $159 billion from a surplus of $127 billion last year. It goes up next year and the next year and the next year, and there is no plan in place, nothing implicit in the budget, no 5-year plan to deal with it, and this erases any hope whatsoever of that.

Now, we are offering, we are offering a motion to recommit. The gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) will offer that motion, and it will simply say as of this year, next year, go ahead and wipe the scorecard clean. But as to future years, the scorecard will still be there, the PAYGO rule will still have that remaining applicability. However, it will not apply if the President sends us a budget which gets in balance finally by the year 2008.

Mr. Speaker, that is a small thing to ask. If we are going to have any kind of discipline, any kind of planning, it is the right thing to ask for. The right way to vote on this bill is to vote for the motion to recommit and then we will have something that we can live with and something that leaves at least some small modicum of discipline in place.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Speaker, budgeting is about choices, and it is about putting together a plan. We did so together with the President this last year. All of the items that we find on the PAYGO scorecard fit within that plan. All of the items as a result need to be taken care of as a result of that plan. This is our proposal to do so to avoid automatic sequestration by OMB.

There has been a number of comments made tonight and I just want to respond to them. First of all, there have been those that say they want to sit down and they want to talk about the future budget, and that is fine. But you need a ticket to the dance and your ticket to the dance is to come up with a plan. Now, the Blue Dogs say they came up with a plan. Well, it is kind of interesting, the Blue Dogs, so-called Blue Dog plan was basically the Republican budget with a trigger. All right. That is kind of interesting. They did not really come up with any other ideas, except for the Republican budget with a trigger. Okay. It did not get any votes, and it did not get the majority of the votes, and, as a result, it really does not qualify much as a plan because it was our plan.

There were really no other plans brought to the table. There were individual bills, however; substitutes, individual proposals. The gentleman from Texas had a farm bill that evidently does not technically fit if in fact you do not have a budget. The gentleman wrote it, wrote it under our budget, supported it, worked hard on it, I compliment the gentleman on it, I voted for it, because it fit within our budget plan. It would not fit now, would it, I would say to the gentleman and to any of my colleagues. Yet should we have automatic spending cuts? Should we have automatic cuts in Medicare in order to pay for it? No. And that is what this bill tonight does. It basically says we should not have automatic cuts in Medicare in order to accomplish that.

I will admit to my colleagues on both sides, and the gentleman from Arkansas, if he thought I was trying to be funny, I was not, because there is nothing funny about it; this is very serious. It is serious for both sides, because it is fine to come down here and say that the tax cuts were too big. Then have the guts to introduce a bill to repeal them. Have the guts to come down here and vote to increase taxes.

They do not have a plan that does that. I do not see too many people with the guts to introduce that kind of legislation.

The same is true on our side, though. We always talk about spending restraint. Boy, we can be spellbinding some nights about how we are going to restrain spending, cut spending. We have even said "cut spending" when in fact that is not really what is going on very often around here. Maybe it is allowing it to grow less than somebody's idea of where it should be, and therefore somebody thinks it has been cut.

The bottom line is, as we go into this next budget, we have some huge choices that we are going to have to make. We have to be serious about them. But I do think that because of the situation that we find ourselves in it is fair to allow, particularly with PAYGO, which was never written to work during times of surpluses, it was only, only written and contemplated for times of deficits, that we should allow that to expire and rewrite the rules.

While we allow that to expire, wiping the slate clean I think is a fair thing to do, particularly if it is going to result in cuts in Medicare, crop insurance, veterans' education, child support recovery, and the victims of September 11.

So what we are suggesting tonight is very simple. That is what the vote is about. This is not about the budget. There is no budget process reform in this bill, trust me. I have written a budget process reform bill. I would know one when I saw it. This is not it, either. All this does is it does two things. It says, follow the budget; and do not allow for automatic cuts in Medicare, crop insurance, military, child support, veterans' education, September 11, and actually a whole host of other automatic cuts that would occur.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NUSSLE. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, would it be the chairman's intention in the next Congress to introduce legislation, pass it through our committee, bring it to the floor, which would reinstate discretionary spending caps and the PAYGO rule for 5 additional years?

Mr. NUSSLE. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman and I need to discuss that. I would be not only very happy to consider that, but I would even go further with regard to budget process issues. There are a number of them that should be discussed, now that we have an opportunity to do so.

I would hope that we can do that quietly and calmly and with sober regard to the consequences of our actions. We have not done that. Unfortunately, people around here do not necessarily follow the budget process as well as they should; and as a result, demagoguery has reigned with regard to many of these budget rules in the past with regard to changes that we have tried to bring to the floor.

I would hope that we could bring a budget process reform bill to the floor; I have written a PAYGO extension in the past that actually contemplated this very situation that we are in; and I would hope also caps.

Mr. SPRATT. If the gentleman would yield further, Mr. Speaker, and sequestration?

Mr. NUSSLE. I want to make the budget have the force of law, so that we cannot waive it all the time on the floor. That is a proposal that I recommended. There are a number that I would suggest that the committee and the Congress need to consider.

But tonight we have a very simple situation that we need to address. It has been ministerially addressed in years past, and we should do so again tonight, and join together and prevent cuts to Medicare, crop insurance, military health, child support enforcement, veterans' education, and the victims of September 11.

Let us follow the budget plan, let us pass this bill, and let us reject the motion to recommit, which basically says: let us not follow a plan, but let us wait and cut Medicare 3 years from now.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Pursuant to House Resolution 602, the bill is considered as read for amendment, and the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. MOORE

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill in its present form?

Mr. MOORE. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MOORE moves to recommit the bill H.R. 5708 to the Committee on the Budget with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SEC. 1. REDUCTION OF PREEXISTING PAYGO BALANCES.

Upon the enactment of this Act, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall reduce any balances of direct spending and receipts legislation for fiscal years 2002 and 2003 under section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 to zero. If the President submits a budget for the Government under section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, that projects an on-budget balance or an on-budget surplus by fiscal year 2008, then such Director shall reduce all balances of direct spending and receipts legislation under such section 252 to zero.

Mr. MOORE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion to recommit.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to recommit and in opposition to the Republican deficit tax.

Mr. Speaker, if the House Republican leadership continues forward with its fiscally irresponsible tax policies, it will be responsible for passing the largest tax increase in American history—the deficit tax. The deficit tax is real. It is permanent. It is a tax on small businesses and families all across America. In fact, on a per capita basis, the deficit tax cost each American citizen over $1000 last year. Very simply, as the $6 trillion national debt is increased, it increases the interest payments on that debt, which must be paid by taxing hard-working American families.

As bad as the deficit tax is, there's even another burden resulting from increasing the national debt. It is called higher interest rates on loans for homes, cars, credit cards and small business. When the economy gets back on its feet, borrowing hundreds of billions of dollars to finance a huge national deficit will drive up interest rates, in effect, a tax increase on families and businesses.

We all know that this measure tonight to address the pay-go rules was necessary for this year and next in order to prevent major cuts in entitlement programs such as Medicare and veterans benefits. However, by opposing the Moore motion to recommit, the Republican leadership in this House is throwing out fiscal discipline rules for several years after that. I will vote for this measure, because we cannot allow Medicare and veterans benefits to be slashed, but the Republican leadership, by forcing an up or down vote on suspending pay-go rules for the next four to five years, is leading this House down the path of higher national debt, higher annual deficits, and, yes, a deficit tax on our families and our children for the rest of their lives.

House Republicans may brag about tax cuts at election time, but they should be honest in telling our families and children that they are imposing a permanent deficit tax that will take dollars out of their paychecks for generations to come.

Instead of partisan budget bills, what this Congress should do for the good of our economy and the future of our children is to sit down on a bipartisan basis and make tough decisions on how to balance the federal budget.

That would be the right thing to do.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, a year ago, several of my colleagues and I who believe in fiscal responsibility urged caution in making long-term commitments for tax cuts or new spending programs. We were concerned that budget projections were based on unrealistic economic assumptions and that the projected surplus might never materialize. We were concerned that large tax cuts and spending programs could drive up the deficit and add to our $6.3 trillion national debt. Our warnings were ignored.

This year, Congress will be borrowing virtually all of the Social Security surplus for the next decade. There were those who said we will have enough money for everything. That turned out not to be true, Mr. Speaker. Next year we will have a deficit of $127 billion.

Today Congress is considering legislation that would wipe the slate clean for the next 5 years. This would allow Congress to avoid responsibility for legislation, adding billions more to the national debt by wiping clean the PAYGO scorecard. What is worse, this bill provides no safeguard for the future, Mr. Speaker; no guarantees that our children and grandchildren will not suffer under a massive national debt, now at $6.3 trillion.

American families live by three basic rules: number one, do not spend more money than you make; number two, pay your debts; number three, invest in the basics of the future. I think Congress should live by those same simple rules.

I am glad that American families do not use Congress' accounting methods, Mr. Speaker. American families cannot wipe the slate clean when they overspend. The Blue Dogs have repeatedly said that Congress and the President need to sit down and develop a plan to deal with our escalating national debt: no recriminations, no finger-pointing, or blaming, but just sit down and try to come up with a plan out of this crisis. Unfortunately, our calls have been ignored, leaving us in the situation we face today.

This motion to recommit requires as a condition of waiving the PAYGO rules that the President present a balanced budget next year. The President's budget would be required to put us on a path to balancing the budget by 2008 without borrowing the Social Security surplus, a goal that I believe every Member of this Congress wants.

This motion to recommit allows the slate to be wiped clean for fiscal year 2003 to avoid sequestration, because it is too late to do anything about the current fiscal year. There would be no cuts in any programs that have been commented on by the chairman of the Committee on the Budget. This is the least we can do to stop the bleeding, to turn back red ink and get us in the black again, and to get our country out of the deficit ditch and back on the way to fiscal responsibility.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, the President said in his first address to the Congress that there were three reasons why this country may have to return to deficits: one was an emergency, one was a war, one was an economic recession. There is no one in this body who predicted any of those three.

Warnings were not heeded? Wake up. There was not anybody warning about Osama bin Laden and September 11, so do not make those accusations. They are not true. That is why we find ourselves in a deficit.

The President submitted a plan last year, and he will submit a plan this year, which he must do by law. The House last year passed a plan. The House will do so again this year, which we must do so by law.

The other body, and I know I have to be careful, here. I do not want to say anything wrong, because we have our rules. However, my understanding is what I am allowed to say is that no budget passed in the other body last year. We will wait and see what happens this next year.

The point I am getting at is that we need a plan in order to move forward. The President has proved he has a plan. The House has proved they have a plan. No other plans have been presented. No other plans have received a majority of support. No other plans have seen the light of day. Therefore, let us follow the plan that the President has laid out.

Let us not allow us to get off track with absolutely no vision for the future, which is what is being suggested here tonight. Instead, let us reject the motion to recommit, and let us vote to prevent automatic cuts to Medicare, to veterans' health, to veterans' benefits, veterans' education, to crop insurance, and the like. These Draconian cuts are not necessary if we continue to follow the plan that the President and the House has laid out.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the motion to recommit and vote to prevent these cuts on final passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the minimum time for any electronic vote on the question of passage.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 187, noes 201, not voting 43, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 609, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) each will control 30 minutes.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted be 30 minutes in its entirety, divided equally between myself and the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) each will control 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I want to thank the gentleman from California for the courtesy so that we can expeditiously examine this very modest bill. As we discussed under the rule earlier, there are three provisions in the bill: one, to correct a flaw dealing with the continuation of TANF, or welfare; secondly, to make sure that the unemployment program, in a modest way, continues until the House reconvenes in the 108th Congress; and the third is to provide the administration with some legal protection if they decide to make some decisions which would allow some adjustments in the Medicare program.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I suspect that many people will vote for this bill, but it cannot go unnoticed that the bill does not do nearly enough. It is a day late and a dollar short. It does not really improve Medicare and deal with many of the providers. It merely gives the administration, hopefully, the right to correct a glitch in the way physicians are reimbursed. There is some great discussion going on that they may already have that. The fight seems to be that correcting the physician glitch will cost 43 billion bucks and the question is, Do we get billed again for that or does the administration? And does it fit, or increase the deficit or does it not? So there is no guarantee that your physician friends will get their problem corrected. There is some guarantee that the hospitals, nursing homes, rural hospitals, teaching hospitals and the uninsured will absolutely get nothing.

As to the welfare reform bill, there may be a lot of blame as to why we have not reauthorized it; but in any event, since 1996, the day it was passed, the funding for welfare reform, or welfare payments in this country has dropped by 11 percent. We are not doing anything to increase it and that is tragic. Welfare reform is more than a benefit check. It is child care and job training; it is education, the very foundations of self-sufficiency.

It is too bad now, particularly that we do not worry about PAYGO anymore, that we cannot at least deal with the millions of poor families even a tenth as well as we deal with the very rich in the tax cuts that we have given them. Fourteen million families eligible for child care assistance do not receive it and millions of Americans out of work are struggling. We are not doing an adequate job in unemployment, where this bill really falls down. I will turn soon to my colleague from Maryland, the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, to explain that to you. We have spent trillions of dollars in tax cuts for the rich and we are tonight going to talk about a mere billion dollars to extend unemployment benefits for only a small portion of the Americans who are struggling. Again, it is not fair and it is not adequate.

There was a time when we in Congress could hold up our heads high and say that we took care of all Americans who were unable to fend for themselves. We are not even doing that. I think that it is tragic that here we are in the last hours of this Congress and we are attending to something that I do not think any bill at this time could correct all the problems. It is kind of a sad commentary that we have come this far and left so many people impoverished and unaided by a government that has given so much to the wealthy.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker it is my pleasure to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. HERGER), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HERGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5063, as amended. This bill would temporarily extend unemployment benefits for an additional 5 weeks. It also will extend the funding and rules for the Nation's welfare reform program through March 31, 2003, allowing us additional time to reauthorize the historic 1996 law.

Mr. Speaker, we must keep the pressure on to reauthorize welfare reform for 5 years as quickly as possible. This will be our goal in the next Congress, and we look forward to working with both Republicans and Democrats to get this job done.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Human Resources.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, let me thank the gentleman from California for yielding me this time. As the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has said, this is a modest bill that moves forward in three areas in a very modest way. It is the last train out of the station, and I would urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, it does deal, as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Human Resources said, with a 3-month extension of TANF. That is better than what was in the continuing resolution. It guarantees that our States will receive at least their first quarter payments. That is important. But I know we are all disappointed that we were unable in this Congress to reauthorize the program for 5 years. Certainly we wanted to reauthorize it for more than 3 months.

Secondly, the gentleman from California (Mr. STARK) has already commented on the Medicare provisions. We hope that the provisions here will help the physician reimbursement system. But we are all disappointed that we were unable to complete the structure changes for skilled nursing facilities, rehabilitation therapists, hospitals, home health. There were provisions in here that were noncontroversial for our military. None of that was able to get accomplished in this Congress, and I think we are all very disappointed that we were unable to do that.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the third area, unemployment insurance. Yes, there is a modest improvement in the underlying legislation, but I think we should be very disappointed that we have done nothing at all to help the 1.8 million Americans who will have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits before we will have an opportunity to revisit this program again next year. That is particularly disappointing when you recognize the fact that in every prior recession, in a bipartisan way, we have extended Federal unemployment insurance benefits as a safety net to those who are hurt through the recession through no fault of their own.

We have $25 billion in the Federal unemployment trust account. The money is there. The number of people suffering from long-term unemployment has doubled over the last year. We know that if we provide assistance that money will get back into the economy quickly and help us in the recovery. That is why in every prior recession, we have been very clear in providing additional help through the Federal unemployment insurance system. Yet in this recession we have failed. I think that is extremely disappointing, and I would hope that we could have done better.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. ENGLISH), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ENGLISH. Mr. Speaker, more than 800,000 unemployed workers throughout the U.S. and over 35,000 in Pennsylvania alone are faced with the grim reality that their unemployment benefits will end just 3 days after Christmas. With the economy in such bad straits and so many working families suffering, we cannot stand by and let the Grinch steal Christmas from the unemployed whose holidays are already constrained by an extended period of unemployment. This cutoff is hanging like a sword of Damocles, like a Grinch, over these families; and we need to act today.

This bill removes the December 28 cutoff on benefits. It allows more than 800,000 unemployed workers nationwide who will already be receiving extended benefits to temporarily continue receiving benefits when the current program expires. This bill extends federally funded benefits by up to 5 weeks per individual. This bill continues through January 2003 the current availability of additional weeks of federally funded extended benefits in certain high-unemployment States. As a long-time supporter of this issue, I feel it critical that we move now to provide extended unemployment benefits to these families.

I urge my colleagues to join me in standing up to the Grinch and making sure that America's unemployed continue to receive benefits after Christmas.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), who understands that while the opposition is willing to spend over a trillion dollars in tax cuts to the wealthy, they are unwilling to make good on their earlier promise to spend a thousandth of that amount to insure nursing home patients.

□ 2045

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, first on unemployment comp, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. ENGLISH), about 35,000 will be benefitted, at the most, 5 weeks. More than twice that will face Christmas having exhausted their benefits and get no help through extended benefits because of the failure of this Congress to act more than twice. So this is not really a modest program. It is really a flawed program and an inferior one because 800,000 will get several weeks. Over 1,800,000 who will have exhausted their benefits will get zero, and it will be simply because of the accident of when they exhausted their benefits. If they exhausted them earlier or later, they come up with zero, and that is not the way this country should respond to the needs of people who are unemployed through no fault of their own.

Let me just finish by saying something about this approach in terms of physicians. We needed to do something, but what you are doing is essentially more appearance than it is reality in terms of the cost. You do not come forth here with a proposal that addresses this directly, which will cost $20 to $60 billion over 10 years. You do not want CBO to score it. So you come forth and give carte blanche to the administration to do what they say they cannot do anyway, and because it would be done administratively it would not be scored, but it will come out of the budget and will add $20 to $80 billion in the deficit over 10 years, and it will not address the other needs of other providers. That really is one modest approach. It is a flawed and inferior approach. It forces us perhaps to vote yes, but realizing the terrible, terrible shortcomings of this approach.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Washington (Ms. DUNN), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the extended unemployment benefits we passed last year are due to expire on December 28. Without an extension thousands of dislocated workers will lose the unemployment benefits they need to make ends meet as they search for a job. The problem is extenuated in areas like Washington State, where unemployment rates continue to be high and jobs are very tough to find.

Extending the Federal unemployment benefits for an additional 5 weeks will help about 45,400 dislocated workers living in Washington State alone. It is the least that we in Congress can do before adjourning for the year to ensure that every family has a happy holiday season. This bill is a targeted approach to help individuals who need it the most. It is a step toward providing temporary assistance at a time when our country is getting back on the track to recovery.

I urge my colleagues to vote for this important bill, and I hope that the other body will adopt this bill before leaving for the year.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, this is a really interesting bill because it really kind of lays it out cold-bloodedly. The President, or the White House, has had 2 million jobs lost since they came into office, and they do not care. When the White House announced their special interests for this session, they said we want homeland security, we want Federal judges and we want terrorism insurance. Not one single word about the economy.

I come from a State where there is 7 percent unemployment. The Northwest is the highest in the country. And anybody who exhausts their benefits before January 1 gets nothing. Oh, excuse me. They get 5 weeks after the first of the year. That is all they get is 5 weeks. As the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) has already said, we have $25 billion sitting in a fund to deal with this, and you come out here with a 5-week plan. I mean Merry Christmas, folks. Are you going to send turkeys around at Thanksgiving also as part of this program? Why can you not ever admit that you fouled up the economy and the people you have put out of work you are unwilling to take care of when you have the money sitting there? It is sitting there. I cannot understand how you are going to go home to people and say, well, we are sorry, we will be back in on January 7 and we will pass something real quick; so do not worry, do not worry, do not worry. I mean you are saying at Christmas time to people you are not going to take care of them.

Our unemployment in this country, we have gone up 25 percent in long-term unemployment in the last 6 months, and there is no question between now and February an estimated 1.8 million people are going to lose their unemployment insurance, and you are not doing anything for them, just a little tiny Band-Aid. And it is pretty clear where your priorities are. You are willing in the last bill to take off all the financial controls to spend on defense, to go $100 billion, $200 billion into debt in Iraq, but you will not give anything but 5 weeks of unemployment to the people who have lost their jobs in this mess you have created.

I think that we will be back in January, we will all vote for this. We know it is inadequate, but that is what you are offering them, and we are not going to say no. We are not fools. But the fact is you are going to come back in here in January and you are going to hear the same speech from me because I am going to say to you why are you only taking it 3 months or you will go 6 months? You will not recognize what you have created here, and you have long-term unemployment that is going up in this country and you just cannot seem to face it. So we will vote on this inadequate piece.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I appreciate the gentleman's argument that we are giving someone 5 weeks. That is like saying we picked up a hitchhiker on the West Coast and drove him within three blocks of the Statue of Liberty and he is complaining because we did not drop him right at the door. As a matter of fact, we did not wait until he finished his business and then took him back to California. Because the facts are, and the gentleman is from Washington State so let us use Washington State, there are people in Washington State who have received more than 1 year of unemployment benefits. They have received 26 weeks, an additional 26 weeks, and the 5 weeks the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT) was talking about was part of, on top of all of those months, an additional 13 weeks which was a 50/50 match between the State and the Federal Government. And of course States have their own programs in which they can continue to extend it.

So for the gentleman to take the time to create the impression that all we are doing is 5 weeks is to say that at the very least that is 5 weeks on top of 26 weeks, on top of 26 weeks, on top of an additional 7. So when you really look at it in terms of the way in which the benefits have been provided, a short way of saying it is there are people who have received unemployment benefits for better than a year.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I guess that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the gentlewoman from Washington State (Ms. DUNN), the previous speaker, said it all. It is the least we can do, and it is a modest bill. We could do better. We should do better. We have never had a modest tax cut coming from the other side of the aisle. It is only modest when we try to help the least fortunate among us. So while one never looks a gift horse in the mouth, I am sure that the few people it does help will be happy. I intend to support the bill. I only wish that we could have had the leadership to do better for more people in this country.

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, last month's New York Times predicted that if there is to be an economic recovery in our future, it will be a "jobless recovery." I would submit that for the 8.2 million Americans who are unemployed, an economic recovery that does not provide more jobs is no recovery at all. And of course, as consumer confidence plunged to a nine year low in October, any economic recovery—with or without more job openings—seems strongly in doubt.

For this reason, H.R. 5063's plan to extend the Temporary Emergency Unemployment Compensation (TEUC) program, which is presently scheduled to expire on December 28, 2002, is woefully inadequate and provides an extremely limited amount of additional unemployment relief.

According to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, between now and February 2, 2003, 1.8 million jobless workers in need of assistance would fail to receive it under this plan. Only three states, Arkansas, Oregon, and Washington, are eligible for the five-week extension of the TEUC program authorized by this bill.

And when one considers that the number of long-term unemployed who are looking for work after 27 weeks almost doubled over the last year, that the Economic Policy Institute has reported there are 2.7 unemployed workers for every job opening, and that the Congressional Budget Office expects the unemployment rate to remain near 6 percent until the second half of 2003, it is clear to me that American workers deserve a better and more comprehensive unemployment plan.

In fact, the bill's proposal represents an enormous missed opportunity. The failure to provide additional weeks of benefits to those who have already exhausted their federal benefits is a missed opportunity to provide a dose of immediate, well-targeted economic stimulus.

In addition, the federal unemployment trust funds will have an estimated surplus of $24 billion at the end of this year. And yet, the Republican proposal is estimated to cost less than $1 billion, leaving $23 billion unused, helping no one. This approach seems inconsistent with the basic purpose of the trust funds: to build large resources when work is plentiful in order to provide relief to unemployed workers when they need it most. I think that time is now.

It is unfortunate that no alternative to the proposal contained in H.R. 5063 was allowed by the majority's rule. An effective alternative proposal would have recognized that American workers from the heart of this nation, and that Federal unemployment insurance was intended for those workers during tough times like today. An effective alternative proposal would have also recognized that the number of unemployed Americans is as high today as it was when the original and comprehensive Federal extended benefits program was enacted in March. This time, workers may receive much less.

In a so-called "jobless recovery", millions of Americans will remain jobless. Under today's so-called unemployment plan, 1.8 million Americans will also be without unemployment compensation. We can do better for American workers.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I will be voting for this bill, reluctantly. I feel it is a feeble attempt to run away from the challenges that face us, and to shirk our responsibilities to the American people. But because it is the only legislation the Majority is giving us the opportunity to vote on, and because it will get a modicum of temporary help to some struggling people, I'll support it.

Everyday, I receive a deluge of letters and calls from my constitutents—doctors, hospitals, patient-advocacy groups, and nursing homes—letting me know that they are in trouble. Jobless rates are up. The October 1 Medicare Cliff passed us by, and we did almost nothing to mitigate the damages. Doctor reimbursements have been slashed, we are short of nurses and have lost funds to bring in new ones. Our long-term care facilities are on the brink of financial ruin. If we do not provide appropriate funds for vital services, these services could be lost. Reimbursement rates are so low in some sectors that medical facilities lose money by treating patients, so Medicare patients may soon be denied care in some areas. People will suffer.

I understand that emergencies do happen. Sometimes, we need to bend and maneuver the rules of the House to get issues handled expeditiously. But, we have seen these problems on the horizon for months. We all knew it. I, with many like-minded colleagues have been pushing hard for real change—bold steps to take care of the challenges that face our constituents and our health care system. But good bills have been languishing here in the House. There was always an excuse for inaction. We have run out of excuses though.

I and my Democratic colleagues have consistently supported a package with provisions that would improve reimbursements to doctors and hospitals serving Medicare patients, would eliminate the 15 percent reduction in home health payments, would strengthen Medicare+Choice programs, and would help rural providers. But, unfortunately, these provisions were defeated.

Instead, the Majority has gutted an excellent bill from the other body that would have helped our men and women serving in the military receive fair tax relief, and would have stopped the horrible practice of some wealthy individuals who renounce their U.S. citizenship in order to avoid their responsibilities to pay taxes. In a time of war, what kind of a signal are we sending to our people in uniform, by sacrificing their needs, in order to play politics, and benefit the worst tax-evaders?

What we have before us today is a mockery of what good legislation can be. It is a band-aid approach to bypass surgery. It is a token for few, but an insult to the many health care providers who are struggling to meet the needs of our nation's sick. If it gets past the Senate, it will provide a brief extension for welfare recipients in programs such as Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF), and child assistance. It extends, for a short time, unemployment benefits for people who are now receiving benefits and who live in a few selected states. Those in other states, and those 1 million workers whose benefits have expired, but who are still struggling in our flailing economy to find work, receive no help.

I will vote for this bill, because it is better than nothing. But, I feel the Republican leadership has squandered an opportunity to do good. They should have brought us this bill as it passed the other body, so we could show our support to the people in our military. They should have worked with the Senate to get real relief to the unemployed, which would have provided a stimulus to our economy, rather than giving a free pass to tax dodgers overseas. They should have worked with Democrats to ensure adequate reimbursements to our health providers, so that services will be there for the people on Medicare.

Instead, we have a bill that will go nowhere once it leaves the House. I hope we will do more for the American people in the 108th Congress.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I support the provision in this bill that extends the welfare program and the related Temporary Medical Assistance (TMA) program through the end of March. TMA allows families leaving welfare for work to keep their Medicaid insurance coverage. My only question is why my Republican colleagues would extend such an important program for one quarter when it would make much more sense to extend it for one year, two years, or more.

Similarly, I support the effort in this bill to prevent payment cuts to physicians in Medicare. However, I regret that the bill does not accomplish nearly enough.

We do need to help physicians under Medicare, but we also need to help other providers. Hospitals, home health agencies, and nursing homes are in a similar situation. I hear from my constituents on these issues nearly every day. We cannot turn a blind eye to their problems because, like physicians, their role in caring for Medicare beneficiaries is critical.

This bill also neglects to provide States with any Medicaid fiscal relief, which is urgently needed to prevent hundreds of thousands of working Americans from losing their health insurance coverage. States are already cutting back on coverage—and as a result, pregnant women and children, senior citizens in nursing homes, working disabled, and women with breast or cervical cancer all across the country may soon find themselves without health insurance.

Ultimately, I will support this bill, because doing something is better than doing nothing. Yet it seems callous for the House Republican Leadership to let Congress leave without addressing these critical issues. We should be preventing millions of Americans from losing their health insurance and protecting the Medicare program for America's seniors.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 609, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3210, TERRORISM RISK PROTECTION ACT

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 607, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 3210) to ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of November 13, 2002, at page H8722).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

September 11, 2001, will go down in history as one of the most tragic days in American history as a foreign terrorist network unleashed a devastating attack against our Nation, killing or injuring thousands and causing greater insured losses than all recent natural disasters combined. This attack not only destroyed the lives of innumerable innocent people from all corners of the world, but it was also intended to disrupt the very center of America's financial infrastructure.

Fortunately, the American people and our economy proved stronger and more resilient than anyone could have imagined. Under the leadership of our President, we have fought back, destroyed the terrorist launching pad, and fortified our borders and financial infrastructure security. We absorbed the terrorists' best hit, and our financial system and our will remain as strong as ever.

In the insurance industry not a single American firm was rendered insolvent and insurers were able to expedite claims payments to rush aid to those most in need.

The one weak link in our comeback has been the foreign reinsurance market, which since 9/11 has been understandably uncomfortable with providing further coverage for terrorist attacks. An effective insurance industry relies on spreading risk as broadly as possible, in the case of reinsurance across the entire globe. American insurers rely on foreign reinsurance to protect their solvency against truly catastrophic events. Insurers simply cannot responsibly provide protection for American businesses without some sort of financial backstop, and where the foreign private sector can no longer fill that role we must step in to protect our economy against the threat of future attacks.

A recent Real Estate Roundtable survey cited more than $15 billion in real estate projects across the U.S. being delayed or canceled because of their terrorism exposure. If the building projects do not go forward, it means that the architects, engineers, construction workers, and realtors do not work. Our economy will continue to be impaired and thousands of American jobs will continue to be lost. We cannot afford to allow the terrorists this victory. We must act.

Another survey found that 84 percent of responding American businesses do not believe their companies have sufficient coverage in the face of another terrorist attack and 71 percent find it difficult or impossible to obtain adequate coverage. We survived 9/11, but without a reinsurance backstop for terrorism, another attack could force thousands of companies into bankruptcy with no protection or recourse. At a time when we are preparing for war in the Middle East and facing repeated terrorism security warnings in the United States, we cannot afford not to have a Federal backstop in place.

President Bush immediately realized the significance of this economic problem and called on the Congress to pass legislation soon after 9/11 and has been tirelessly pressing Congress for legislation ever since. The House quickly answered this call with passage of legislation last November 1 a year ago and now stands ready to deliver. We have worked closely with the President and the Senate to draft strong bipartisan legislation that is pro-consumer, pro-taxpayer and pro-business. This legislation, the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act, will provide a Federal backstop for Americans to protect against future catastrophic terrorist attacks. We provide American businesses with immediate protection upon enactment while long-term contracts are being negotiated. The Federal backstop then phases out over time with insurers paying a steadily increasing deductible of 7 to 15 percent of their premiums before the Federal catastrophic protection kicks in.

As the reinsurance market flows back in, the Federal involvement would phase out in 3 years.

We also provide full protection for the American taxpayers. The conference report provides for full payback of any Federal assistance, with the first $10 to $15 billion of losses required to ultimately be borne by the insurance industry as mandatory retention and payback. The remainder will be recouped based on economic conditions.

Consumers are provided with mandatory availability of terrorism coverage and with a significant disclosure to improve their competitive options.

This bill is absolutely necessary to the well-being of the American economy to protect U.S. jobs and against future terrorist attacks. We need this backstop in place now.

I would be remiss if I did not point out the considerable contributions made by my colleague and subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER). Without his hard work and dedication, this legislation would not have been possible. Also I recognize the important contributions to protect Americans by our full committee ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), and our subcommittee ranking member, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KANJORSKI), here in the House, as well as Senators DODD, SARBANES and GRAMM.

Our House conference report was signed by every single conferee on our committee, and its bipartisan support is a testament to the work of the President and these Members.

I just want to take this opportunity to thank my good friend, JOHN LAFALCE. I think he is probably handling his last bill in his role as ranking member on the committee. But I want to personally thank him for his dedication and service to our Nation, and particularly his hard work on this very, very important legislation on terrorism insurance. We have worked continuously for the last 2 years, and I just cannot say enough about his dedication and hard work. We are going to miss you, John, and all of the opportunities we have had to work together on numerous issues; and we wish you the very best in your retirement.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio very, very much for his very kind comments. It, too, has been a pleasure working with him, especially the past 2 years during his chairmanship of the Committee on Financial Services.

Mr. Speaker, after very many fits and starts, the terrorism reinsurance package will finally become a reality, despite persistent opposition by many in this body who stalled passage of this bill for almost a year by seeking to unfairly limit the rights of victims resulting from a terrorist attack.

Our Nation has been faced with numerous economic dislocations as a result of the September 11 attacks as it continues to prepare for the specter of future attacks. A case in point is the legitimate concern raised that the market relating to terrorism coverage has evaporated, forcing primary insurers to increase prices or withdraw coverage, so we have had both an unavailability and an unaffordability problem.

This is not an insurance industry problem, because if the insurance industry cannot reinsure the risk of future terrorist attacks, or will not, it will either not offer terrorism coverage or will price it out of the reach of most consumers and leave areas of the country particularly susceptible to terrorist attacks without coverage, and, most importantly, stall or scuttle future building projects. The consequences of such action for our economy and for consumers, should this continue, could be devastating.

The conference report achieves what I believe is an acceptable balance. The bill makes insurance available by constructing a short-term Federal backstop with minimal government intrusion into the insurance market by ending 3 years after a private sector mechanism emerges. In addition, it requires significant contributions by industry that keeps industry on the hook for substantial losses, thereby protecting the American taxpayer.

More importantly, the bill also avoids making this important economic package a Trojan horse for tort reform, a favorite of many in this body and many in the White House, some of whom worked long and hard for over a year to derail this bill in order to advance what I consider to be an ideological agenda at the expense of economic growth and the protection of American businesses.

Rather, the bill before us tonight provides for prudent measures that protect the interests of taxpayers and maintains the legitimate rights of victims by, one, creating an exclusive Federal cause of action governed by applicable state law for all suits for property loss, personal injury or death arising out of a terrorist event; secondly, consolidating claims into a single Federal district court; and, third, ensuring that the Federal Government will not be directly or indirectly responsible in its role as a reinsurer for any punitive damages.

I support this important response to mitigate the economic fallout from the threat of future attacks on this Nation, and I urge my colleagues to support this conference report, as I have and all the Democratic conferees have, and then I would urge the President to sign it into law swiftly.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FERGUSON), a valuable member of the committee, as well as the conference committee.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of this terrorism insurance legislation that is crucial to our economic security in this Nation. This year alone the lack of terrorism insurance has terminated or delayed billions of dollars' worth of commercial property financing. Across this country we have seen hospitals, office buildings, malls, stadiums and museums among the many facilities that are having difficulty finding terrorism coverage.

With commercial development stalling, workers are also missing out on jobs. That is why it is imperative that we pass this terrorism insurance legislation to protect American jobs and strengthen our economy as we protect ourselves against future terrorist attacks.

Without coverage, the economic impact of another terrorist attack would indeed be devastating. The U.S. could face a string of bankruptcies, loan defaults and layoffs that would intensify the blow of the attack. As a conferee on this legislation, I am proud to say that we have produced legislation that is a direct response to the uncertainty in the insurance market that is hindering the economy and costing American jobs.

Under this legislation, private insurance would pay for damages up to a certain amount, and the Federal Government would guarantee against catastrophic losses. By establishing a temporary risk-spreading program to shore up the insurance market, it will help provide much-needed confidence and certainty, while also minimizing government regulation, which would only go into effect if a terrorist attack occurred. It will also effectively limit market disruptions, encourage economic stabilization, and facilitate the transition to a viable private market for terrorism risk insurance.

Most importantly, we have carefully crafted a package with much-needed taxpayer protections, including mandatory payback and recoupment. This ensures the availability and affordability of terrorism insurance in the market, while also maintaining the flexibility to protect taxpayers and policyholders.

I applaud President Bush and the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) for their determination and leadership in moving this legislation that will strengthen our economic security. I urge my colleagues to support this terrorism insurance legislation to help create jobs, strengthen economic growth, and reduce the impact of any future terrorist attack.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KANJORSKI), the distinguished ranking member of the Subcommittee on Capital Markets, Insurance and Government Sponsored Enterprises responsible for the terrorist insurance bill.

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on the Terrorism Risk Insurance Act. We need this economic stabilization to provide an inoculation for our ailing economy.

Since last year's terrorist attacks, insurance rates for businesses have risen significantly across the country. One recent report by the Insurance Information Institute found that insurance rates have increased by 30 percent or more after last year's terrorist attacks. One of the primarily factors contributing to these dramatic increases is the lack of terrorism insurance.

The failure to create a Federal terrorism insurance backstop has also had serious implications for our economy. As the report of the Joint Economic Committee found, the problems associated with terrorism reinsurance pose a significant threat to sustained economic growth. The Real Estate Roundtable found that the lack of terrorism insurance availability for commercial properties has resulted in the cancellation or delay of $15 billion in real estate deals, resulting in the loss of potentially 300,000 fewer good-paying construction jobs.

Terrorism insurance is critical to protecting jobs and promoting America's economic security, whether in Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, or Hazleton, Pennsylvania, or in New York City. The issue of terrorism insurance may also affect our national economy more immediately and more drastically than any tax or spending issue that Congress has considered in recent years. Without Federal intervention in the insurance marketplace, our already-sluggish economy will likely experience increased instability in the near future.

The conference report before us today is workable; it is an effective compromise, one that provides substantial financial protection. I am pleased that the conference report contains a number of provisions which I advocated. For example, the legislation designates the Secretary of the Treasury as the administrator of the program and clearly authorizes auditing powers and penalties.

Additionally, I worked to ensure that this conference report allows the Treasury Secretary to consider the effect of payback surcharges on urban, smaller commercial, and rural areas and on different lines of insurance. These considerations are important because they will ensure that the individual policyholders will be treated fairly and a small business, a farmer or other rural policy holder will not be asked to disproportionately subsidize losses associated with national symbols like a skyscraper or large manufacturing plant.

Moreover, through the process of considering this bill, I have worked to adapt the simplest, cleanest bill to get us through the period of uncertainty until the private sector can price the terrorism reinsurance.

Mr. Speaker, this bill should have been before the Congress a year ago. We worked diligently in the subcommittee; and if the report of the subcommittee had been presented to this floor a year ago, I am convinced in my own mind there would have been well over 420 votes to support it. Unfortunately, as the ranking member of the committee indicated, this got caught up in ideology and other factors, trying to make it a locomotive, if you will, to handle tort reform.

I think this is a perfect example of how we could start the new year and the new Congress in recognizing that partisanship and special interests or ideologies should not be made part of public policy. We can start by looking at this case as a case in chief as to how legislation can be accomplished and how it cannot be accomplished and why 1 year lost of construction time and investment is not worth the attempt to win some political point or political benefit.

I compliment the chairman of the committee and the chairman of my subcommittee; and particularly I want to compliment, pay respect to, the ranking member from western New York. Without his diligence and without their diligence, we probably could be arguing until the cows come home.

Fortunately, everybody realized that America needs this bill. The insurance industry, which is probably the least likely industry that wants Federal involvement, recognized that this is a role government should play. But most of all, Mr. Speaker, the American people and the American economy need this bill.

I urge my colleagues to support this conference report to their fullest extent.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), the majority whip, soon to be majority leader.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, the chairman has done a lot of hard work on this bill, and I rise today to support the terrorism insurance legislation before us and to highlight the important work still to be done on this issue.

I had my doubts about this legislation from the very beginning. The most accurate assessment of the risk to Americans is developed by the private marketplace, free from government interference. However, terrorism insurance is not always available, and sometimes it is available only at prices people cannot pay. But the most troubling aspect of this bill is the flaw that leaves American taxpayers holding the bag and trial lawyers running away with the loot.

□ 2115

The House passed a bill containing strong liability protections. The most important was an outright ban on punitive damages. We now have a conference report that lacks this ban.

Mr. Speaker, President Bush's top four economic advisers explained it best in a June 10 letter. They said very directly, "Punitive damages are designed to punish criminal or near criminal wrongdoing. American companies that are attacked by terrorists should not be subject to predatory lawsuits. The availability of punitive damages in terrorism cases would result in inequitable relief for injured parties, and threaten bankruptcies for American companies."

I wish these were the only problems with this bill. But the most troublesome aspect is the prospect that taxpayer dollars may be negotiated away in an out of court settlement. There is no sufficient mechanism in this bill to protect a raid on the Treasury by predatory trial lawyers.

Unfortunately, there is an industry in America today that profits from tragedy and suffering. Businesses and property owners and victims who have lost their lives are innocent bystanders in terrorist attacks. My concern is that we are handing this industry additional tools to take advantage and compound these tragedies.

President Bush repeatedly said during this election that we need to stand with the "hard hats" and not the trial lawyers, and I agree with that.

However, this bill falls very short of the President's intent. The Wall Street Journal described its weaknesses as a "bonanza for trial lawyers."

I raised these concerns with President Bush. He agreed that there is more work left to protect victims of terrorism and the Federal Treasury, and he pledged to work with us next year to resolve these flaws.

I want to thank President Bush for that pledge to protect the taxpayers.

As long as I have been in Congress I have guarded the taxpayers, and we are working to fix the problems with this bill.

We are going to lock the doors of the Federal Treasury against trial lawyers who would exploit flaws in this new law to soak the taxpayers.

I am going to stand with hard-working Americans. I am going to stand with those "hard hats," and I am going to oppose anyone who seeks to plunder the Federal Treasury.

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Manhattan (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his fine leadership on this committee and on this legislation.

I rise in strong support of the conference report for the Terrorism Risk Protection Act, which provides a Federal safety net in the form of a loan program to the insurance industry in the event of another terrorist attack.

September 11 cost the insurance industry more than $40 billion and many insurers have since dropped terror insurance completely or hiked premiums to extreme levels.

The lack of comprehensive and affordable terrorism insurance has blocked billions in development deals, halting construction and costing jobs.

The bill provides loans to insurers for 90 percent of damages over a deductible and can apply to terrorist events over $5 million. Very importantly, it sunsets 3 years after passage.

This is an economic stimulus bill for New York City and the country.

Cathy Wylde of New York City Partnership estimates that passage of this bill will add 1 percent to the GDP of New York City, and some economists believe it will have the same impact for the Nation. It is extremely important to get our economy moving again. It is about jobs, putting people to work, and not letting terrorists cut off credit.

One example of the impact of the lack of terror insurance is the situation facing the managers of the Conde Nast building in Times Square. This 48-story property is a New York City landmark that houses a publishing empire and the famous NASDAQ market site from which the TV networks broadcast updates on the stock market.

While the building's owners have always carried insurance to cover the $430 million mortgage, after September 11 terrorism coverage insurance alone for the building skyrocketed to $5 million a year. The building's owners were unable to pay this high amount while the bank holding the mortgage demanded that they carry full coverage. As my colleagues might expect, this situation has led to prolonged litigation.

Passage of this legislation will resolve the situation for the Conde Nast building and for many other properties like it across the Nation.

Importantly, this is not just a New York City or New York State problem.

According to a recent report by the Mortgage Bankers Association, the lack of terrorist insurance has led to downgrades by the rating agencies of commercial real estate property around the country. The MBA alone believes the downgrades have cost its industry $8 billion in canceled or delayed projects.

I am very pleased that today's bill contains a compromise on the tort reform issue.

Finally, I want to thank the chairman of the committee, and to the Democratic leader of the Committee on Financial Services, I want to thank very much the gentleman from New York (Mr. LaFALCE) for his tireless work on this issue and so many others. He stood for principle throughout consideration of the debate on this bill and, I would say, all legislation before the committee. We will truly miss his contributions to the Committee on Financial Services and to this Congress. I believe this will probably be the last bill that the gentleman will manage on the floor and we appreciate very much the gentleman's wonderful leadership and all of his fine work for his district, New York State, and I would say for the country.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Capital Markets, Insurance and Government Sponsored Enterprises.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the chairman yielding me this time and certainly want to compliment his leadership on this most important matter, and certainly the gentleman from New York (Mr. LaFALCE) and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. KANJORSKI), who have worked tirelessly with us to propound a resolution to this most difficult problem.

The important point I wish to speak to tonight is the significance of the mechanism by which we assist the industry while requiring repayment of taxpayer dollars. When one of these tragic events occurs, certainly the most important thing we can do is to keep our economy working and not have the tragic event of terrorism which takes the lives of innocent human beings, which causes the destruction of properties, to extend into the workforce and cause people to lose their employment by the loss of construction jobs or other opportunities. Without the passage of this act, should there be another unfortunate event, which all of us hope never occurs, we would face very uncertain times.

The industry was able to respond, gratefully, to the horrific events in New York, but capital is depleted and we do not know what ability they may have if we suffer an event on such a grand scale again.

Tonight we are responding to those eventualities by saying yes, we will help industry, we will help you in times of short-term liquidity, when your bank account is low, when you have paid out the claims and you cannot meet the next obligation, but we are going to require that industry to put their money up first; we do not go to the taxpayer as the first stop. But then we say to those companies, here is the taxpayer loan and it is in fact a loan where we are going to enable you to continue to operate by extending credit to you during this time of crisis, but we are going to expect you to pay it back.

That is a unique standard. This House has acted in other areas of concern relating to business operation in times of terrorist attack and we have not required the extension of taxpayer funds to be repaid. Tonight, we establish a new standard. Yes, we are willing to help big business; yes, we are willing to do what is necessary to keep our economy going, but when the economy returns and the industry is enjoying a profit, we are going to expect to get our money back. I think that is not only entirely appropriate, but the highest standard of conduct for this committee to have exercised. We should not ever open the taxpayer checkbook to industry of any sort without demanding a high standard of conduct. Tonight we are setting it: You are going to give us the money back.

Now, the Secretary of the Treasury does have the discretion, should we be in desperate economic circumstance where the imposition of the repayment would not be wise, meaning it would raise the premiums on homeowners, on business owners, or that the industry simply could not generate the resources to pay the money back. So we have a balanced approach. We say yes, we will help in times of crisis and we expect you to pay us back, but if economic conditions do not warrant it, the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to this Congress why he believes that the repayment should not occur. I think this is an excellent balance utilizing common sense and taxpayer resources to do that which we all are driven to do: to ensure that our economy functions, that terrorists do not win, that innocent working people are not harmed, and that at the end of the day our economic interests are protected.

I wish to commend all of the parties who have contributed mightily to this effort and say, job well done.

With regard to those issues concerning punitive damages, I agree with our whip. I do believe that we should be very careful in opening the doors to allow those who choose to file unwarranted litigation and suits and take 30 or 40 or 50 percent of the award that is granted, particularly in the area of punitive damages, for no apparent public policy reason, and I hope it is an area that with the President's leadership we can return to next year and resolve in the favor of the American taxpayer.

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Texas

(Mr. BENTSEN), a departing Member of Congress and a very distinguished representative who is here with his lovely daughter to witness what I think will probably be his final remarks in Congress.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I want to say at the outset what a pleasure it has been to serve with the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) on the Committee on Financial Services.

I rise in strong support of the conference report. I want to echo the comments of my colleague from Louisiana, because I think he does understand the prudent nature of this legislation. I for one have been one who is concerned about the extension of government credit where markets already exist which can provide for that. What we learned in the aftermath of the despicable attacks of September 11 was that in addition to the human carnage there was also an economic fallout, particularly as it related to the insurance market. In effect, the insurance market for terrorism which heretofore had been a very narrow and inexpensive market basically was unpriceable. One could not buy it at any price. And as such, not only were existing loans on commercial structures out of compliance with their loan documents, but innumerable new projects were halted because lenders were not able to, or were not comfortable to provide credit where the risk of terrorism would not be covered by the insurance market.

So it became necessary for the Congress to act.

We started looking at this issue shortly after September 11, 2001, and as the gentleman from New York and the gentlemen from Ohio and Louisiana will recall, we had a number of issues that were thrown on the table. We had the reinsurers who were here, hat in hand, and wanted a program much like what Great Britain has done with the City of London and expanded across the entire nation; we had the Treasury Secretary and the administration that was here with a proposal which, quite frankly, would have put the taxpayers I think, and I think the majority of the committee felt, a little bit too much on the hook than we felt was the appropriate way to go. Actually, over time, a pretty sensible bill was crafted, bipartisan bill was crafted, primarily with the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Louisiana, and I was proud to join them on that legislation, along with the senior Senator from the State of Maryland.

As we went forward, the principle that the gentleman from Louisiana espoused became very clear, and it was that the government would provide a backstop using the credit of the American taxpayer, but that we would not do it forever, that it would have a sunset, and that there would have to be some payback mechanism; that if we were going to extend the credit, we needed a way that we could recoup the losses to the taxpayer.

As the gentleman said, that was a rather unprecedented approach. It has survived in this legislation, and it was not supported across the board by a number of Republicans and Democrats, but it did survive. I think a lot of credit goes particularly to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER), because he was quite adamant in that regard.

In addition, I want to address the question of tort, because we discussed that in the committee when we first moved the bill on this side of the street. I have to take issue with the comments of my dear colleague, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), my neighbor in Texas, the majority whip, soon to be majority leader. As I see the final conference report, there are a number of changes that are designed to protect the taxpayers from excessive litigation: number one, all tort claims are consolidated; number two, they are all Federal claims and not State claims; number three, if I read it properly, no claims can be made against Federal taxpayer dollars.

There are some who, unfortunately, sought to use this bill as a proxy for the issue of tort reform. Yet I do not think that was what the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman, wanted to do; and quite frankly I do not think that is what the gentleman from Louisiana wanted to do, because they understood what the core problem was.

Over the last year and a half, almost, that we have been working on this legislation, I have yet to meet one business leader, one commercial developer, one insurance person who has said that the tort issue is an issue that must be addressed. The concern they had was that there was no insurance market available and that development had come to a screeching halt.

Tonight, we finally have a product which is prudent for the American taxpayer, which sets a very fine precedent going forward for future Congresses as they look at the extension of Federal credit. I hope our colleagues will adopt this package. I wish we could have done it sooner, but thank goodness we are doing it now. I commend the chairman and the chairman of the subcommittee, and my colleague, the gentleman from New York, and the ranking member for the work they have done.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, let me recognize my good friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. EDWARDS), who also is involved in his last bill on the floor, at least for a while. He has been a principled member of our committee and has provided reasoned judgment throughout a number of the issues that the committee has dealt with over the last 2 years. I want him to know he has my personal thanks and recognition for his excellent work.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY), chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigations.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, our world fundamentally changed with the cowardly act of a handful of terrorists. Passage of this bill represents another significant step in our efforts to address the new realities we confront.

This bill addresses the fact that one of the key objectives of the terrorist networks is to disrupt our economy. The losses of September 11 and the continued terrorist threat demonstrate that we must provide basic protections for our economy.

The September 11 attacks resulted in the largest single hit to our insurance industry in history. Since then, businesses and insurance markets have faced a new reality. Insurers are being asked to insure terrorism risk when they have no realistic way to determine the fair price for that risk, or, in the vast majority of cases, being able to obtain any reinsurance for it.

Moreover, no one can presently calculate the proper odds for where or when the next attack will occur. We do know, however, that our government officials believe that we should expect additional attacks. Consequently, the vast majority of insurers have been reluctant to cover terrorism, especially for major buildings, factories, or gathering places.

Where terrorism insurance is available or is required by law, insurers are now charging high premiums for it and offering very limited capacity to protect against the risk of insolvency. I believe that the GAO put it best when they testified before my oversight committee that "large companies, businesses of any size perceived to be in or near a target location, or those with some concentration of personnel or facilities, are unlikely to be able to obtain a meaningful level of terrorism coverage at an economically viable price."

Hospitals have been especially hard hit by this terrorism insurance crisis. Representatives of some of the New York hospitals testified before my subcommittee that they have seen a 256 percent increase in their coverage of their insurance rates for only one-third of the previous coverage. It is only one example of the crisis. I have many, many more and will insert letters into the RECORD which demonstrate this.

It is clear that the current lack of terrorism coverage acts as a chill factor, restraining our economy. We heard that businesses, particularly in cities and near potential targets, wanting to build are being required to carry terrorism insurance. However, there is little or no terrorism coverage available, so some new construction is being stopped before it can even start. This is causing the loss of new jobs at a time when creating jobs should be one of our highest priorities.

In short, the failure to act quickly on terrorism insurance legislation is imposing a fear tax on America, costing real jobs when the country is trying to pull out of a recession.

In addition, the administration says that another terrorist attack is extremely likely, and we must plan now for how the government should react to an attack; now, not after another attack. We have learned countless lessons from September 11 on homeland security, and the need for this legislation is one of them.

This conference report is a good solution to the problem and deserves our full support. I ask my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to join me in support of jobs by voting for this conference report.

I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) for his leadership, and I thank his wonderful staff for their work on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I include for the RECORD the following letters regarding terrorism insurance:

JULY 8, 2002.

Hon. SUE KELLY,
House of Representatives, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN KELLY: Our members, the owners, institutional investors and others in real estate in New York City, appreciate the leadership you have provided in dealing with the critical problem of the absence of adequate terrorism insurance coverage.

I understand from a recent conversation with one of our members, Douglas Durst, that you are interested in having some specific examples of the problems the absence of terrorism insurance coverage has created. Those examples follow:

4 Times Square, also known as the Conde Nast building, is in litigation with its lender due to the absence of terrorism insurance coverage. The lender, La Salle Bank and CIGNA has threatened to invade the "lock box" into which rents are deposited in order to buy $430 million in terrorism insurance, the amount of the mortgage. The insurer for the portfolio held by the owners of 4 Times Square has refused to write coverage for this building claiming it is "high profile." The owners have recently obtained $100 million in terrorism insurance but without no coverage for biological or chemical events. As for the remaining $330 million dollars in coverage the lenders require, the courts will resolve whether the money to buy such coverage, if available, can be claimed from the cash flow of the property. Should the courts determine that the cash flow can be invaded for this purpose, the full interest due to the investors holding certificates will not be paid, the rating services will downgrade the securities which are already on the Moody's watchlist, and the individuals who invested will see their investment eroded. Meanwhile, the owner-builder of 4 Times Square has equity of $450 million invested in this $880 million building and no coverage. That owner, who typically would be investing in the construction of a new building is stymied.

A lending officer at HypoVereinsbank, the major construction lender in the nation, has advised us that at least 5 major construction projects in his portfolio are not going forward until the terrorism insurance situation is resolved. HypoVereinsbank wants full terrorism coverage including biological and chemical causes as well as certainty that for the duration of construction the insurance will be available. Four of these projects are in New York, the fifth in Chicago. Andy Veith, the lending officer will try to reach you later this week either by phone or e-mail.

Downtown, a one million square foot office building owner could not obtain refinancing for the underlying mortgage of approximately $200 million because terrorism insurance was unavailable. Finally, a lender agreed to go forward if the owner committed to pay $41 per square foot for stand alone terrorism insurance coverage. At the same time that the owner faced that $1 million additional drain on the cash flow of the building, he also had to absorb an increase of from $110,000 to $550,00 over the prior year's cost of insurance. This additional cost, in addition to excluding terrorism risk, does not cover mold or biological, nuclear or chemical events whether terrorist generated or otherwise. The owner now has $1,440,000 additional insurance expenses with less comprehensive coverage on the environmental risk side than before, and has to self-insure for the equity that he has invested in the property.

A REIT portfolio, which includes major office complexes in Boston, San Francisco, D.C. as well as a trophy midtown Manhattan building, can get only $250 million in terrorism coverage for the entire portfolio worth several billion. If there is one more terrorism incident, it is likely that even this limited coverage will be lost given its not uncommon 30-day cancellation clause.

Other examples from across the country, including hospitals, stadiums, major transportation centers and other vital private and public investments that are not covered by terrorism insurance, along with a vivid description of the ripple effect this problem is having on the overall economy, appear in the May 23rd Joint Economic Committee report to Congress.

It is most important that enactment of some form of government temporary back up for terrorism insurance coverage occur quickly.

We appreciate your efforts to resolve this critical problem.

Sincerely,

DEBORAH B. BECK,
Executive Vice President.

WIEN & MALKIN LLP,
New York, NY, July 9, 2002.

Re insurance.

Hon. SUSAN KELLY,
Longworth House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSWOMAN KELLY: Thank you for your efforts to date to highlight the extremely difficult insurance market for commercial real estate owners and developers in New York City and other major cities across the United States.

Our firm represents a portfolio of over 8,000,000 square feet of office space located in Manhattan, including the Empire State Building that as a result of the events of September 11th, is once again the tallest building in New York City. I feel that our recent experience trying to renew the insurance for these buildings underscores the problems that Congress needs to address.

The maximum amount of property insurance that we have been able to obtain at any price is $200 million dollars for this portfolio, less than half of our coverage of the $550 million maintained for the past 12 months. This level of insurance is significantly below replacement cost of any one of our properties, leaving our investors with significant risk.

Of even greater concern, this $200 million dollar program does not cover any loss between $75 million and $100 million. This "hole" in coverage further places our investors at risk and limits our ability to obtain future financing.

The program outlined above specifically excludes any act of terrorism. We have only managed to secure a $25 million dollar terrorism program because of insurance providers' general unwillingness to issue coverage in New York City. We also found it necessary to purchase a $50 million pollution liability program in the event of a chemical or biological attack because such an attack is excluded from the terrorism program noted above. Despite the drastic reduction of coverage, the premium for this program has increased an astonishing 500%.

In summary, it is clear that the insurance industry has opted to limit its exposure in major cities, resulting in reduced capacity, limited competition, and exorbitant pricing. The insurance industry's unwillingness to provide adequate levels of coverage at reasonable rates will translate into higher rents for tenants (to whom increased operating expenses are generally passed under typical lease clauses), fewer new construction projects and a general depression in the real estate market as the inability to shift certain risks historically assumed by the insurance industry drives people from the market.

I hope this information will help you in your continuing efforts to persuade your colleagues to rectify this situation.

Very truly yours,

PETER L. MALKIN.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. COX).

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I rise in support of this legislation, which is urgently needed and has been urgently needed since September 11, and particularly since November of 2001, when this House first passed it.

By backstopping the market's provision of terrorism insurance, this legislation will be a boon for new construction everywhere in America. But construction cannot get completed in America because financing is not available, and the reason financing is not available is that terrorism insurance is not available. This bill will fix that. By taking a huge, unquantifiable risk out of the equation, we will make writing terrorism insurance feasible again and will help Americans get back to work and start growing the economy.

We are dealing with this bill much later than we should be, many months after it should have been completed, because there has been a disagreement about protections against abusive litigation. This bill that we are voting on tonight is imperfect in that respect. Several of the protections of taxpayers' interests and the national interest that were built into this legislation in the original House-passed version have been deleted. These differences are not minor.

From the original House bill, we have eliminated a prohibition on punitive damages. We have eliminated fair-share liability for noneconomic damages, such as pain and suffering, and a requirement that attorneys' fees be reasonable. I do not believe that any of these provisions should be eliminated; but in the very brief time that I have remaining, Mr. Speaker, I will address just one of them: fair-share liability for noneconomic damages.

When the U.S. Government certifies that the terrorists were responsible, it should not be possible for lawyers to come in and assert, because of 1 percent liability found or prospectively that might be found for another party, that 100 percent of the obligation should rest there, particularly when we are talking about noneconomic damages; that is to say, completely notional damages like pain and suffering, things that lawyers can gin up by asserting it, merely by asserting it in a complaint. In each of these circumstances, the taxpayers will be made liable.

Mr. Speaker, we need to fix these flaws in the bill immediately when the 108th Congress convenes. On that understanding, I am supporting this bill because it is so desperately needed to put America back to work.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. SHAYS), a valuable member of the committee and a member of the conference committee.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, following the terrorist attacks of September 11, the Committee on Financial Services moved quickly to study the lack of availability of terrorism insurance. Under the leadership of the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) and the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER), we held hearings, met with financial experts, and alternately passed legislation to create a Federal insurance backstop to cover losses in the event of future terrorist attacks.

The legislation we are considering today is consistent with the bill passed by the House last November. Like its predecessor, it addresses the availability and affordability of terrorism insurance while protecting taxpayers and policyholders. It gives insurance companies the assistance they sought without giving them a blank check.

Mr. Speaker, the economy may be growing, but it sure does not feel that way. This bill is truly one of the keys to getting our economy back on track, spurring development, and creating jobs. I urge all of my colleagues to approve this measure and send it to the President, because it is not a question of if but when, where, and what magnitude we will face a terrorist attack using conventional weapons or, just as likely, weapons of mass destruction. The casualties could be large and the liability beyond comprehension.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I support this bill; and I encourage everyone to vote for it. It is a shame we were not able to pass it a year ago, about the time we reported our bill out of committee and passed it on the floor of the House; but I do think this is a much better bill now than the one we passed earlier.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this, as I indicated in my opening remarks, is a very, very important piece of legislation. It is critical that the Congress act. The President has called for us to act.

Let me cite from an article today in The Washington Post regarding the threat of attack that "terrorist groups may be planning a new wave of attacks on Western targets. Even before the purported bin Laden tape surfaced on the al-Jazeera satellite network on Tuesday, the CIA, FBI, and National Security Agency had detected a significant spike in intelligence chatter over the previous 10 days that strongly indicated new assaults are being planned, officials in U.S. intelligence agencies said."

In congressional testimony last month, CIA Director George Tenet warned that recent attacks in Yemen, Kuwait, and Bali signal an escalation in terrorist activity which he characterized as "as bad as it was last summer, before the airliner hijacking assaults on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon."

"That threat environment level was high then and it has not lessened," a senior administration official said yesterday. "Bin Laden's appearances have always been carefully orchestrated, and unfortunately, they have often presaged a major al Qaeda attack or development."

Mr. Speaker, it is time that this Congress act. I appreciate the strong bipartisan support that this legislation has entertained over the last several months. This is a good example of Congress at its best, but it is even more important that we provide this framework for protection of the American economy. This bill does exactly that. I ask my colleagues for strong support for this conference report.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the September 11 terrorist attacks have devastated many industries and sectors changing the landscape of the American economy, including the insurance industry.

The legislation before us today, H.R. 3210, is a reasonable piece of legislation and I am particularly pleased that the majority has shown the wisdom of removing the tort liability limitation provisions of the legislation. I joined my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee and those on the Financial Services Committee who worked hard to eliminate Section 15, a tort reform provision, which would effectively have banned punitive damages in terrorism-related cases. This provision was absolutely unnecessary.

This passage of this measure is important because the insurance industry has stated that, while it will be able to cover the estimated $40 billion in claims resulting from the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, any new and renewed policies will not cover terrorist-inflicted damage unless the government helps cover that unknown liability. This is an issue of great concern to Congress and to the nation.

This legislation can make a great difference. Earlier this year, we acted swiftly and deliberately assisting the Airlines industry in the amount of $15 billion to save this important industry which was so severely devastated by the September 11 attacks. I am glad that we have come to an agreement that will allow us to act with bi-partisan sensibility to help this important sector of our economy as well.

This is not just an insurance industry problem. Rather, it is a national issue because if the insurance industry cannot reinsure the risk of further terrorist attacks, it will either increase premiums to the detriment of consumers, or simply stop offering terrorism coverage altogether. Furthermore, without adequate insurance coverage, lenders will not be able to lend and new investments will not be made, creating a credit crunch that could further devastate our economy.

Under this bill "each insurer will be responsible for paying out a certain amount in claims a deductible—before Federal assistance becomes available. This deductible is based on a percentage of direct earned premiums from the previous calendar year, and rises from 7 percent during the first year to 10 in year 2 and 15 percent in year 3. For losses above an insurer's deductible, the Federal government will cover 90 percent, while the company pays 10 percent."

"If the Federal government pays for insured losses during the course of a year, the Treasury Secretary will be required to recoup the difference between total industry costs (individual insurers' losses up to their deductibles, plus the industry's 10 percent cost share above the deductibles) and the following fixed dollar amounts per year: $10 billion for year 1, plus the last few months of 2002; $12.5 billion for year 2; and $15 billion for year 3. The recoupment will be accomplished through a surcharge on policyholders. The Secretary has discretion on the timing of the surcharge, but the surcharge cannot be more than 3 percent of the premium paid for a policy in a given year. Losses covered by the program will be capped at $100 billion; above this amount, Congress is to determine the procedures for and the source of any payments. The Secretary may assess civil penalties on participating insurance companies for submission of false or misleading information or failure to repay the Secretary for any amount required to be repaid."

I lend my support to this bill. Congress can and must act to protect the most vulnerable sectors of our economy, and those who most need assistance. The underlying bill holds the promise of protecting the insurance industry and the millions of Americans dependent on it. The version of the bill before us today goes a long way toward restoring confidence to our nations lenders and should help bolster our struggling economy. As such, I urge my colleagues to support the measure before us tonight.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I just want to take a quick moment to comment on an important part of this legislation, group life insurance. H.R. 3210 contains a study of group life insurance and I would like to clarify that it was the intent of the House that the term "group life insurance," as it appears in the text, is used in it's typical and customary sense to mean "an insurance contract that provides life insurance coverage, accidental death coverage, or a combination of both for a number of persons under a single contract and that provides such coverage on the basis of a group selection of risks."

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises today to express his support for the conference report of the Terrorism Risk Protection Act (H.R. 3210). This conference report will help ensure that businesses are able to acquire property and casualty insurance while still providing taxpayer protection against terrorist losses. This Member is pleased that the House and Senate conferees have reached an agreement on terrorism insurance which President President George W. Bush is expected to sign. This Member is a cosponsor of H.R. 3210, which the House first passed on November 29, 2001, by a vote of 227–193.

This Member would first like to thank the distinguished gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), the Chairman of the House Financial Services committee, for both introducing this legislation and for his efforts in bringing this conference report to the House Floor. Additional appreciation is expressed to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. BAKER) who also played a crucial role in crafting the conference report on H.R. 3210. Moreover, this Member would also like to thank the distinguished gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), the Ranking Minority Member of the Financial Services Committee, for his bipartisan cooperation and assistance on this conference report.

The uncertainty caused by the terrorist events on September 11, 2001, has resulted in the possibility of serious problems for the insurance industry and the insured from additional severe terrorist attacks. To illustrate this, reinsurance companies provide insure against massive losses for insurance companies. Since this terrorist attack, many primary companies, because they cannot receive reinsurance, have sent notice cancellations to businesses indicating that they will not receive coverage for losses caused by terrorist activities. If both small and large businesses continue to be unable to receive insurance, it will contribute to the further instability of the American economy. Insurance provides a very important element of the stability needed by businesses to continue functioning and investing and for bankers to continue lending to businesses.

As a Member of the House Financial Services Committee, which has jurisdiction over the important elements of the limited Federal role in commercial insurance, this Member supports this conference report for the following two reasons. First, obviously it helps ensure that commercial insurance continues to be available for businesses—and available at affordable costs. Second, it provides necessary taxpayer protections against possible severe terrorist losses to businesses.

Under this conference report, a temporary Federal terrorism insurance program would be established within the Treasury Department. Under this program, Federal funds would be provided to property and casualty insurance companies when losses reach the "trigger" level. In particular, Federal funds would pay 90 percent of the terrorism-related losses of insurance companies that exceed 7 percent of the company's premiums in 2003; 10 percent of a company's premiums in 2004; and 15 percent of a company's premiums in 2005. Each insurance company would pay for 100 percent of insured losses up to those thresholds and 10 percent of the losses above those levels. This Federal terrorism insurance program would cover industry-wide losses up to $100 billion per year.

It is also very important to note that this conference report provides for the mandatory repayment of some of the Federal funds used to cover insured losses. Under this conference report, for 2003, the insurance industry must repay the Federal assistance which is the difference between the sum of all insured losses paid by the industry and $10 billion. For 2004 and 2005, these repayments would be made for the difference between the sum of all insured losses and $12.5 billion and $15 billion, respectively. These repayments would be collected through a surcharge on the policies of all commercial insurance policyholders. Therefore, this conference report is not an insurance company bailout; it protects the American taxpayer against a big hit while continuing to maintain insurability against terrorist attacks.

Furthermore, this conference report also provides taxpayer protection from punitive damages in lawsuits which claim terror-related losses or injuries. To illustrate this, this conference report requires all terror-related lawsuits to be considered in Federal court, rather than in state courts. Moreover, this conference report does not set a Federal standard for awarding punitive damages in terror-related lawsuits. However, it instead allows the state law in which the terrorist act occurred to prevail with respect to punitive damages. Most importantly, the conference report requires that punitive damages awarded through these lawsuits will not be paid for by Federal funds used to cover losses from terrorism. For my Nebraska constituents, it is important to note that punitive damages are not allowed under Nebraska state law in Nebraska state courts.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this conference report balances the need of businesses to continue to receive commercial insurance against terrorist acts at affordable costs, with taxpayer liability protection. As a result, this Member urges his colleagues to support the conference report of H.R. 3210.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the bill, H.R. 3758.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1214, MARITIME TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ACT OF 2002

Mr. LOBIONDO. Pursuant to House Resolution 605, I call up the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 1214) to amend the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, to establish a program to ensure greater security for United States seaports, and for other purposes, and ask for its consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 605, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of November 13, 2002, at page H8561.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) and the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO).

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002. I would first like to thank the members of the conference committee who have provided the leadership and vision to create this landmark legislation, especially the gentleman from Alaska (Chairman YOUNG), the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), Senator HOLLINGS, and Senator McCAIN and Senator LOTT.

The Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002 establishes a comprehensive national system to increase transportation security for our ports and waterways. This legislation was developed to prevent a terrorist attack along our Nation's largest and perhaps most vulnerable border, consisting of 95,000 miles of coastline with hundreds of ports. The United States maritime industry contributes $742 billion to the gross domestic product each year, and a ripple effect of an attack on an American port would be absolutely devastating.

The goal of S. 1214 is to deter terrorist attacks against ocean shipping without adversely affecting the flow of U.S. commerce through our ports. Striking this balance has been a key and essential element of my approach to this issue, and I believe that this bill achieves this goal.

S. 1214 requires the Coast Guard to conduct vulnerability assessments of our United States ports. The results of the assessments will be used to implement a national maritime transportation security planning system, consisting of a comprehensive national plan, specific area plans, and local vessel and marine facility plans.

S. 1214 also establishes a requirement for the Coast Guard to assess the effectiveness of security systems in certain foreign ports and to deny entry to vessels from ports that do not maintain effective security. Under S. 1214 individuals who enter secure areas on vessels or facilities will be required to have background checks and transportation security cards that will be issued by the Federal Government.

The Maritime Transportation Security Act authorizes grants for enhanced facilities security at U.S. ports for the next 6 fiscal years. These grants will help cover the costs of port security improvements and fund research and development projects to determine which technologies will best improve port security.

I have personally visited ports located in and around my home State of New Jersey and have seen the security challenges facing these facilities. Securing our ports is a critical Federal responsibility and the grant program is helping ports around America increase security and deter any would-be attackers.

Shipping containers are particularly adaptable to use by a terrorist, and S. 1214 contains several provisions to improve the securities of our containers. The bill requires the Secretary of the Department in which the Coast Guard is operating to maintain a cargo tracking, identification and screening system for shipping containers shipped to and from the United States.

Finally, the bill requires the establishment of performance standards to enhance the physical security of shipping containers, including standards for container seals and locks.

Mr. Speaker, this bill contains other important security enhancements concerning enhanced vessel crew member identification, Coast Guard sea marshals and vessel transponders to track the movement of vessels in United States waters.

Equally significant, the bill contains several additional security enhancements and other Coast Guard provisions previously passed by the House. The Coast Guard, as one of the Nation's five armed services, has a key role in homeland security, particularly as it relates to port security and defense readiness. These provisions strengthen the authority of the Coast Guard to confront the terrorist threat facing us today. Strong maritime homeland security requires a strong Coast Guard with the resources it needs to protect the country from a terrorist attack.

During my chairmanship of the Subcommittee on Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation, I have long said that the Coast Guard needs three things, essentially, to be successful: More money, more manpower, and more modern assets. Fortunately, this measure addresses all three needs and will help the Coast Guard to keep serving America both proudly and successfully. The bill authorizes expenditures for the United States Coast Guard for fiscal year 2003. Title V of the bill authorizes approximately $6 billion for Coast Guard programs and operations for fiscal year 2003. The bill funds the Coast Guard at levels requested by the President of the United States. An injection of $550 million in additional operating resources will also allow the Coast Guard to address chronic budget shortfalls. The bill fully embraces the President's call for an additional 2,000 Coast Guard personnel.

Many of the Coast Guard's most urgent needs are similar to those experienced by the Department of Defense, including spare parts shortages and personnel training deficits. Title V authorizes $725 million for Coast Guard acquisitions. This funding will help support the recapitalization of the Coast Guard's vital assets, especially the Coast Guard's deep water program, which is so long overdue.

Immediately following the events of September 11, 2001, the Coast Guard launched the largest home port security operation since World War II. And as part of operation Noble Eagle and Operation Enduring Freedom, the Coast Guard established ports and coast line patrols with 55 cutters, 42 aircraft, and hundreds of small boats. Over 2,800 Coast Guard reservists were called to active duty to support maritime homeland security operations in 350 of our Nation's ports. The Coast Guard enforced over 118 Maritime security zones around Navy vessels, cruise ships, nuclear power plants and other facilities.

The Coast Guard now requires a 96-hour advance notice for all ships entering U.S. ports. I want to commend the Coast Guard for their rapid response to the September 11 attacks and thank them for their tremendous service to our Nation. Fortunately, we have already provided the Coast Guard with broad legal authorities to implement the necessary security measures within U.S. ports. However, without substantial additional Coast Guard resources, we are not going to be able to significantly enhance maritime security.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to commend the men and women of the Coast Guard who, as I said before, have done such an exceptional job in service to their country. America benefits from a small Coast Guard that is equipped to stop terrorists and drug smugglers and support the country's defense to respond to national emergencies. We must now act to put the Coast Guard on a sound financial footing to be ready to respond to increasing homeland security demands and to carry out other critical missions.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the hard working House staff members who really have made this bill possible. Both from the House and Senate side the staff members worked extremely hard with long hours on this bill. An accomplishment of this magnitude is in large part due to their efforts.

I would like to single out one person in particular, Rebecca Dye, who I have had the pleasure of working with as my tenure as chairman of the Subcommittee on Coast Guard and Maritime Transportation, who has worked tirelessly throughout the 2 years that I have been chair and especially worked tirelessly on this bill. She will be leaving us shortly, and I want to take the opportunity to say what is our loss will be the gain for the United States of America. I thank Rebecca very much for her service to this committee, and I wish her the best of luck in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the conference report on S. 1214, the Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002.

The events of September 11, 2001 has changed America forever. Every Member of Congress has examined the programs and policies within their committee to determine what they need to do to help protect the people of the United States from terrorists. The conference report we are considering today will provide the framework to secure our seaports and coastal communities from terrorist actions.

Each year 95 percent of the U.S. imports and exports are moved by ships. U.S. consumers are dependent upon foreign oil for the gas they use in their cars. U.S. manufacturers are dependent upon the just-in-time delivery system of the container ships to resupply their manufacturing line.

We have recently seen the impact that a shutdown of the marine transportation system can cause when the West Coast waterfront employees locked out the longshoremen from unloading ships in port. A terrorist attack in our ports could have had an even more devastating impact on our Nation's economy.

Each year thousands of Americans enjoy cruises out of Florida ports. Cruise terminals and ships must ensure that cruises are not just enjoyable but also safe. The cruise ship industry is already working closely with the Coast Guard to protect the vacationing public. This legislation will help make the working relationship even closer.

On October 3, 2001, I introduced H.R. 3013, the Ports and Maritime Security Act of 2001. This legislation is very similar to the conference report we are considering today. They both require port vulnerability assessments of our Nation's ports, they both require terminal security plans, and they both establish a new grant system to help ports and terminal operators pay for security improvement. I believe that S. 1214 will lead to major improvements in securing the international maritime transportation system from threats of terrorists and from being used to deliver a weapon of mass destruction to the United States.

Section 70105 restricts access to secure areas of terminals to individuals that have a biometric security card that have passed a background investigation. Only those individuals that have unescorted access to a secure area, such as those people that have access to open containers or cargo manifests, will need a card.

Two provisions in S. 1214 are in particular interest to my home Port of Jacksonville and the 12 other ports throughout the Nation that have tremendous importance in times of war. In awarding the security grants established under Section 70107, the Secretary is directed to make it a priority for ports that have great defense importance, such as the Port of Jacksonville, to receive funds. Without securing these military load center ports, our troops that are deployed overseas may not receive the vital supplies they need.

We are contemplating military action in Iraq. Funding for these specific ports is vital, not only for the security of the soldiers protecting our freedom, but for the citizens and communities who proudly support these important ports.

The second provision ensures that the Secretary can award grants to ports for securing measures they have already taken since September 11, 2001.

In addition, S. 1214 contains the text of H.R. 3507, the Coast Guard Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003. This act contains many provisions to improve housing for Coast Guard personnel, to provide compensated leave for Coast Guard personnel that are in isolated duty locations, and to improve maritime safety.

I would like to thank the gentleman from Alaska (Chairman YOUNG), the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) for the bipartisan effort they have used to develop this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), the chair of our full committee, who has done such a great job in helping pull this together.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) for his great work as chairman of the subcommittee. I run my committee a little different than most of the other chairmen. I like to have my subcommittee chairmen that handle the bill to do the work, and I deeply appreciate what an outstanding job he has done with the Coast Guard. And he has Coast Guard facilities in his district and represents the Coast Guard quite well and the ports, which is something that I think this bill will help take care of.

We have a serious problem, which I think we have met in this bill, and that is the importation of product without screening. We do that. We really think that this will make sure that something cannot, it could happen, but cannot readily happen because of the passage of this legislation, product damaging to the Nation through our ports, and we will be ability to make sure that does not occur. Of course, the Coast Guard plays an immense role in that.

□ 2200

Mr. Speaker, I know that the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. LOBIONDO) has done this before; but I, too, would like to acknowledge Rebecca Dye, who has not only been a staffer for me for many, many years on the committee, her husband worked for the government; and even better, Rebecca is going to move on. This is her last presentation. She has been nominated by the President to serve as a commissioner on the Federal Maritime Commission, and I expect her nomination to be approved by the Senate very shortly. I am very proud of her actions and ability to go forth and serve in an industry that I deeply respect, and that is the maritime industry. She has been a great professional, has done an outstanding job, and formerly served in the Coast Guard as a Reservist. She knows what she is doing.

I would also like to thank Patty Seeman for her hard work, and Ed Lee for his hard work, and of course Liz Megginson, chief counsel.

This bill has been a long time coming. We had to work with Senator HOLLINGS, and I love him to death; but working with Senator HOLLINGS can sometimes be difficult. Working with Senators always is difficult, and I know that I am not supposed to say that. The next rule change, we will be able to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is a good piece of legislation. I know the hour is late and this is a so-called lame duck session; but this is one part of this lame-duck session we should be proud of. It protects our Nation, supports the Coast Guard, and helps our ports. I am extremely proud of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to vote for this legislation, if we have a recorded vote. I thank all Members who have worked together on a bipartisan basis, particularly the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the ranking member. We have done a good job on this legislation.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITFIELD). The Chair reminds Members to avoid improper references to the Senate.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill, which I believe will go a long way towards securing our ports against potential terrorist threats.

The events of 9-11, as devastating as they were, exposed our vulnerability to terrorist attacks. None of us believe future threats will be restricted to the tools of war used on that day, so it is important for all of us to closely examine all of our security issues, particularly our port security.

My district includes the port of the Hampton Roads, the second busiest port on the eastern seaboard. There is military and commercial presence in the port. It is the home of the Navy's Atlantic fleet, and the port is used for numerous maneuvers and military exercises. It is also one of the largest commercial container ports in the United States. Almost 800,000 containers moved through the port last year. Keeping this area secure from terrorist attacks is important to all of us, so we went to work.

Along with other Members, I toured the West Coast and local ports, including the one in Richmond, Virginia, and convened the First Responders and Homeland Security Task Forces in my district to seek advice. The Democratic Homeland Security Task Force also came up with recommendations. This legislation contains many of the ideas and recommendations from those efforts.

For example, the legislation requires the new Department of Homeland Security to perform vulnerability assessments on all of our U.S. ports. It requires the development of national, area, and individual port facility antiterrorism plans. Individual vessels and shore facilities that may be targets of terrorist attacks are required to prepare individual anti-terrorist security plans. This legislation also requires the new Department of Homeland Security to develop and maintain an antiterrorism cargo identification, tracking and screening system for containerized cargo shipped through the United States ports, and to develop performance standards for the physical security of shipping containers. And it establishes a matching grant program so the Federal Government can help share the costs of increased security.

The port of Hampton Roads has already adopted many initiatives to address the potential threats, and the bill will make additional improvements possible.

Many of these ideas originated with our local first responders, and I thank them for participating in this process. This bill is a vital step in making certain that our country's ports and those who live and work nearby are kept safe from terrorism. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. BROWN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we have a good bill with lots of important provisions, including new matching grants to improve port security, a national security card for port workers and truck drivers, antiterrorism response teams and sea marshals, and Coast Guard authority to block ships for nonsecure ports.

We still have a lot of work to do, but this is a great start; and I strongly urge my colleagues to support the passage of the conference report of Senate 1214, the Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002.

I also want to thank staff, and in particular John Cullatner. Against all odds, they did an excellent job.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the gentleman from Alaska (Mr. YOUNG), who has led us in this effort, the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR), the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN), and our entire staff.

We have outlined why this is such a critical and important bill, and I would like to take a moment to reemphasize the job that the Coast Guard is doing for the Nation.

On September 10, 2001, the Coast Guard was dedicating about 2 percent of its resources to port and homeland security. On September 12, 2001, that percentage rose to 60 percent. They have been doing a magnificent job in protecting our ports and deploying for homeland security. Many Members have expressed their strong support for the Coast Guard and the job that they have done, but it is time for us to recognize by more than words and saying thank you, that they need more operational dollars, more acquisition dollars, and more personnel.

With the provisions outlined in this piece of legislation for authorization of almost $6 billion, honoring the request of the President of the United States, we are taking a large step towards making sure that the Coast Guard will have the assets that they need to continue to do a great job.

Mr. HORN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of S. 1214, the Port and Maritime Security Act of 2002 Conference Report. As many of you know, I have been privileged to represent the Ports of Los Angeles and Long Beach for the past 10 years. Each day these ports receive cargo from points around the globe. The San Pedro Bay port complex is the third largest seaport in the world. These ports are responsible for over 30 percent of all U.S. waterborne trade with an estimated value of $162 billion a year. The bulk of these imports arrive in 20- or 40-foot containers aboard some of the world's largest cargo ships. Additionally, our ports handle millions of cruise passengers annually. Insuring the safety of containers and passengers entering and exiting the ports of this country is a daunting task. Currently, only about 2 percent of the shipping containers entering the country are inspected. This simply will not do. Passing this comprehensive port security legislation will insure that more containers are inspected and that our ports are properly protected.

I am particularly pleased that section 203 of this legislation incorporates a bill that I introduced in the 106th Congress. This section authorizes the Secretary of Transportation to make grants to the American Merchant Marine Veterans Memorial Committee to construct an addition to the American Merchant Marine Memorial Wall of Honor in San Pedro, California. Thus far, the Committee has already raised well over $500,000 to begin construction on the second phase of this memorial. Plans for the addition to the memorial call for panels to list the names of those who died while serving in the U.S. Merchant Marine.

Since 1775, the maritime community has played a critical role in gaining and preserving American freedom. The Merchant Marine served as our first Navy and defeated the British Navy in our fight for independence. We owe much to the brave mariners past and present who have served in the Merchant Marine. The American Merchant Marine Memorial Wall of Honor located in San Pedro, California, is a symbol of the debt we owe those who have served so bravely.

Many of my colleagues will remember how the Merchant Marine secured its place in American history during the Second World War. During that conflict, the 250,000 men and women in the U.S. merchant fleet made enormous contributions to the eventual winning of the war, keeping the lifeline of freedom open to our troops overseas and to our allies. This fleet was truly the "Fourth Arm of Defense" as it was called by President Franklin D. Roosevelt and other military leaders.

The members of the U.S. Merchant Marine faced danger from submarines, mines, armed raiders, destroyers, aircraft, "kamikaze," and the elements. At least 6,800 mariners were killed at sea and more than 11,000 were wounded at sea. Of those injured, at least 1,100 later died from their wounds. More than 600 men and women were taken prisoner by our enemies. In fact, one in 32 mariners serving aboard merchant ships in the Second World War died in the line of duty, suffering a greater percentage of war-related deaths than all other U.S. services.

Since that time, the U.S. Merchant Marine has continued to serve our nation, promoting freedom and meeting the high ideals of its past members. It is fitting to honor the past and present members of the U.S. Merchant Marine. This is why I introduced legislation in the previous Congress that would provide additional federal funding for the memorial wall in San Pedro. Twice the House has approved legislation authorizing funds for this worthy memorial, today I am pleased that the House and Senate are moving to approve this authorization in the port security conference report.

Throughout the development of the conference report, I have sought to provide the greatest protection for ports and the communities that surround them against terrorist attacks. I am pleased that the conferees have included port security grants and research and development grants that will encourage the development and use of state-of-the-art technology. Like the conferees, I believe it is important to encourage the private sector to continually advance the state of the art as a means of enhancing detection capabilities and thus enhancing deterrence over time.

When he is reviewing project proposals and awarding grants, I encourage the Secretary of Transportation to give preference to those projects that incorporate technologies that are capable of automatically detecting shielded nuclear weapons, liquid and other explosives, and chemical and biological agents weapons in fully loaded cargo containers without the need for humans to open the containers to manually inspect them. Based on testimony received by the Congress, it would appear that pulsed fast neutron technology is capable today of meeting this need. As a result, I hope that this technology and other technologies will be identified, developed, and installed in our ports as part of the ongoing process of enhancing port security through this legislation.

Long Beach State's Center for the Commercial Deployment of Transportation Technologies (CCDoTT) has been developing maritime technology for many years, and has recently turned their attention to port security technology as well. In the FY03 Defense Appropriations bill CCDoTT was granted $4.3 million for continuation of their important work to develop more efficient cargo handling in ports, high-speed ship designs, and port security research. This funding will allow the center to continue assessing cargo inspection technologies that can help meet the needs of agencies such as the U.S. Customs Service and the Coast Guard.

Section 70107 of the accompanying report authorizes an additional $15 million for fiscal years 2003 through 2008 for research and development grants for port security. I am pleased that report language for the Port and Maritime Security Act of 2002 particularly notes the importance of the research being done at Long Beach State's Center for the Commercial Deployment of Transportation Technologies. This language encourages the Secretary of Transportation and the Secretary of Defense to obligate any current and prior year appropriations under the continuing cooperative agreement. The Center is sponsored by the U.S. Maritime Administration and U.S. Department of Defense and I am certain it will continue to provide invaluable research for America's maritime interests. Again, I am pleased with, and strongly support, this timely port security legislation.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support S. 1214, Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Act. Commercial vessels continued to experience an increased threat of criminal attack. Vessels seem to bear the brunt of these attacks which manifest themselves in the form of sea robbery, hijacking, terrorism, and piracy.

A complex set of security issues threaten the maritime industry and the movement of cargo in international trade. Those threats include terrorism, piracy, smuggling of stowaways and drugs, cargo theft and fraud, bribery and extortion. Enacting requisite port security measures and coordination, cooperation, and communication with government and maritime industry components are necessary.

In my home District, the Port of Houston Authority is a dynamic port that has helped to fuel the Houston area's development as a center of international business and trade. Companies that do business internationally also find Houston attractive because of its well-developed industrial and financial infrastructure; skilled work force; and diverse population. Ample space and favorable conditions for industrial development, as well as for cargo handling, makes the Port of Houston an excellent choice location for industry.

Port security is an essential part for a safe, secure, and competitive operation of the maritime transportation system. It promotes the development of commerce and is an essential element in maritime trade competitiveness, which cannot be achieved merely by modernizing port infrastructure and increasing operating productivity.

Consequently, port security can surface as a significant issue in trade negotiations and government and industry courses of action should be coordinated to facilitate effective solutions. Port authorities should develop the means for exchanging current information on port security issues and for the dissemination of intelligence to the commercial industry. We must protect our ports from criminal attacks and allow them to maintain their trade and commerce.

S. 1214 helps to protect our ports, such as the Port of Houston. This bill directs the Secretary of Transportation to (1) assess port vulnerability; (2) prepare a National Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Plan [the Plan] for deterring catastrophic emergencies; and (3) review and approve Area, vessel, and facility antiterrorism plans.

Further, S. 1214 requires that the Plan to (1) coordinate Federal, State, and local efforts, including Coast Guard maritime antiterrorism teams and Federal Maritime Antiterrorism Coordinators; (2) identify security resources; and (3) include a system of surveillance and notice to ensure earliest possible identification of emergencies. The bill requires the Secretary to establish a system of antiterrorism response plans for vessels in coordination with the Federal Emergency Management Agency. The bill requires that there be transportation security cards for entry to any antiterrorism secure area of a vessel or facility. The bill requires the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security to develop and maintain an antiterrorism cargo identification and screening system, including performance standards for seals and locks of shipping containers.

Moreover, S. 1214 requires that Federal Maritime Antiterrorism Coordinators develop, update, and integrate Area Maritime Transportation Antiterrorism Plans, as needed. The bill also requires owners or operators of vessels or facilities to prepare an antiterrorism plan for deterring a catastrophic emergency, including the identification of the plan implementor, the availability of antiterrorism measures, training and drills.

S. 1214 directs the Secretary to establish maritime antiterrorism teams to protect vessels, ports, facilities, and cargo in U.S waters. Also, S. 1213 directs the Secretary to assess the effectiveness of antiterrorism measures maintained at specified foreign ports and make recommendations for improvements, if necessary.

The bill authorizes the Secretary to prescribe conditions of entry for or to deny entry into the United States to vessels arriving from foreign ports with ineffective antiterrorism measures. In addition, S. 1214 requires the advance electronic transmission of passenger and crew manifests from commercial vessels arriving in the United States from a foreign port.

The increasing nature and international scope of the maritime security issues, which threatens our port, requires participation and response from all levels of government. The lack of a secure trade corridor can hamper the economic growth of a port and possibly the country itself. A viable maritime security program is good business. A much bigger economic interdependency exists within the entire transportation network. Ports are committed to developing effective maritime security programs based on the recognition of ports as interchange hubs of commerce, critical to international trade.

In addition to the benefits that this bill will bring to the security of nation's ports, this measure also makes important changes to our nations maritime policy that will help us compete in the global marketplace and gives needed resources and flexibility to the Coast Guard and the men and women that make up this great agency, allowing it to better protect our nation's shores. I strongly support S. 1214. This bill is good for the Port of Houston and good for American ports. Therefore, I strongly urge my fellow members to support this bill.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Conference Report on S. 1214, the "Maritime Transportation Security Act of 2002". Last year, Congress enacted landmark legislation to help protect the aviation industry from terrorist attacks. Today, we finalize legislation to help secure U.S. ports, vessels, and our intermodal transportation system from terrorist attack.

More than six million containers arrive in the United States each year from foreign ports carrying goods that are vital for consumers and manufacturers. Virtually all of the oil imported into the United States arrives by ship. We are a nation dependent upon international shipping.

Yet this transportation system can also be used as a means of delivering a weapon of mass destruction to the heartland of America. It is far easier for a country to put a nuclear bomb in a container and ship it to the United States and have it detonated by a Global Positioning System receiver than it is to build a missile system to deliver a nuclear warhead.

Securing America's seaports and the cargo we import from being used by a terrorist is a daunting task. There are more than 95,000 miles of coastline in the United States. One only has to look at the volume of drugs imported each year by sea to see just how porous our borders are. However, it is a challenge we must address.

The Conference Report on S. 1214 is modeled after the successful Oil Pollution Act of 1990 (OPA). OPA established a strong command and control system—and clarified that the Coast Guard has the ultimate authority to determine how best to clean up an oil spill. S. 1214 establishes a similar system to develop and implement plans to deter terrorist attacks on our ports and on vessels operating in and out of our ports. The system includes development of national plans, area security plans, facility security plans, and vessel security plans.

To help ports, local governments, and facility operators pay for these security improvements, S. 1214 establishes a port security grant program to provide a 75 percent matching grant for security measures that are implemented to address vulnerabilities identified by the Coast Guard. Many ports and facilities in the United States have made security improvements since September 11, 2001. S. 1214 allows the Secretary to make grants to reimburse these entities for any security improvements they have made since that date that are consistent with their facility security plans.

However, protecting the United States must begin overseas. By the time that a weapon of mass destruction in a containership reaches a U.S. port, it is too late. S. 1214 requires the Secretary to review security standards in foreign ports and intermodal transportation systems. If foreign governments do not address their vulnerabilities and provide adequate security for cargoes that are being shipped to the United States, the Secretary may prevent ships from those countries from entering the U.S.

S. 1214 also helps protect our marine terminals by establishing a transportation security card system for those individuals that have "unescorted access" to secure areas of marine facilities (e.g., areas with open containers or areas where individuals have access to cargo manifests). The Department of Transportation currently envisions four levels of security access that can be granted by the card. For example, Level 1 Access identifies a person as someone who has unescorted access to the unsecure areas of a terminal. A Level 4 Access means that person has had a security background check to ensure that he or she is not a "terrorist security threat" and may have access to areas in a terminal that could cause a transportation security incident. On vessels such as a passenger vessel, the bridge and engine room areas may be designated as secure areas to ensure that passengers do not try to take over the control of the vessel.

Other security provisions in S. 1214 include:

Directing the Secretary to develop enhanced standards for identifying crewmembers on foreign-flag vessels entering the United States and urging the Secretary to undertake the negotiation of a new international agreement on seafarer identification.

Directing the Secretary to implement a new system to collect, integrate, and analyze maritime intelligence concerning vessels operating on or bound for U.S. waters.

Requiring all self-propelled commercial vessels more than 65 feet in length to carry position-indicating transponders and electronic charts to make it easier to track their movements in U.S. waters.

Authorizing the Secretary to develop a long-range vessel tracking system using the satellite communication system on all ships.

Expanding the Deepwater Port Act to allow for the licensing offshore facilities for offloading of Liquefied Natural Gas (LNG). This provision will help ensure that new LNG offloading facilities are built offshore—not in coastal cities such as Boston and Charleston.

Allowing Coast Guard personnel to be assigned as sea marshals on vessels that pose a risk to U.S. communities such as tankers.

Establishing a port security training program at the U.S. Maritime Academy, the six state maritime academies, and the Appalachian Transportation Institute to help provide training and standards for maritime security professionals.

Requiring the Secretary to develop and maintain security standards related to cargo identification, tracking, screening, and the physical security of containers including standards for seals and locks.

S. 1214 also contains the Coast Guard Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003.

After a three-year struggle, we have reached agreement with the Other Body to reauthorize the Coast Guard and enact many changes to improve maritime safety and the quality of life for the men and women who serve in the Coast Guard.

These changes include:

Extending Coast Guard Housing Authorities from 2001 to 2007.

Allowing the Secretary to grant extra leave to Coast Guard personnel serving at isolated duty stations.

Allowing for the accelerated promotion of officers when a selection board finds to be of particular merit.

Increasing the amount that the Coast Guard may borrow from the Oil Spill Liability Trust Fund to pay for the removal cost of removing oil from a spill from $50 million to $100 million.

Requiring tug boats escorting vessels though facilities owned by the U.S. Government to be U.S.-flag vessels.

Establishing standards for working conditions and hours-of-service limitations for Coast Guard personnel working in Search and Rescue Centers.

Requiring the Commandant to ensure that all Coast Guard personnel are equipped with adequate safety equipment, including hypothermia protective clothing, when performing search and rescue missions.

Allowing mortgages and other financial instruments used to finance ships to be filed with the Coast Guard electronically.

Establishing whistle-blower protection for seamen on board vessels when the seaman believes that a serious injury may occur if he performs his duties as ordered by his employer.

Extending the period of time during which the Coast Guard can issue a recall for a recreational vessel from five years after the date of construction to ten years after that date.

Requiring the Coast Guard to publish on the internet all major marine casualty reports immediately and all other casualty reports within two years.

Allowing the Secretary to suspend the payment of retired pay of former Coast Guard personnel if the person has left the United States to avoid criminal prosecution or civil liability.

As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, S. 1214 establishes a new transportation worker biometric security card system including background checks, an appeals process, and protection of an individual's private information from his or her employer. Many of these security enhancement and worker protection provisions were not included last year in the USA Patriot Act that requires all commercial truck drivers who haul hazardous materials to undergo a criminal background check before receiving their Commercial Drivers License hazmat endorsement. Because the provisions enacted in the Patriot Act leave behind a vague and confusing regime, many states have not begun to implement the requirements. Even the U.S. Department of Transportation has acknowledged that a problem exists in Section 1012 of the USA Patriot Act and has advised state motor vehicle departments that these provisions "cannot be implemented without rulemaking by DOT."

I believe that the provisions in S. 1214 that provide an individual with the right to appeal the denial of a security card and the protection of information collected during that person's background investigation should be extended to commercial truck drivers that are subject to the Patriot Act. These standards have been developed on a bipartisan basis with the support of labor and employers. If the Department of Transportation fails to include these standards in the regulations they prescribe to implement the Patriot Act by the end of the year, we should move forward with legislation to correct these problems early next year.

Finally, I would like to thank Chairman YOUNG, Mr. LOBIONDO, and Ms. BROWN for the cooperative effort that they have put forth to develop this bipartisan port security legislation. Together, we have succeeded crafting meaningful legislation to improve the security of the marine transportation system against terrorist acts.

I urge my colleagues to support the Conference Report on S. 1214.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, which represents the next crucial step in improving America's transportation security. This bill coordinates various federal law enforcement efforts with local port authorities, develops uniform standards, and helps pay for technology upgrades and other security infrastructure at our ports. I am very pleased that this bill authorizes $6 billion for the Coast Guard, an agency that is severely overworked and underfunded.

This legislation is of particular importance to the State of Florida and its 14 publicly owned deepwater seaports, including Port Everglades, Port of Palm Beach and Port of Miami in South Florida. The challenge of protecting against potential threats to security in Florida is unique due to the state's extensive coastline, vigorous international trade, and passenger cruise activities. Our geography dictates that we must be prepared as a front-line homeland defense point against terrorism, as well as illegal immigration and drug trafficking.

Florida seaports represent some of the busiest bulk cargo and container ports in the nation, and improved security at our seaports is critical for protection of the state's citizens and millions of visitors, as well as the state's continued economic vitality.

The treat of terrorism and other crimes to Florida seaports is well documented. A 1999 state-commissioned study found that the Florida port are highly vulnerable and recommended comprehensive security plans at each Florida seaport. In 2002, the State of Florida enacted legislation mandating that such action be undertaken.

As the Chairman of the Florida Congressional Delegation, I am pleased that this bill does not penalize the Florida ports that have been pro-active in taking the necessary steps to improve security. A shining example of such a port is Port Everglades in my district. Even before September 11, Port Everglades has laid out a comprehensive security improvement plan. Since that day, the port has expedited its efforts, turning a 48 month plan to improve security into an impressive, 18 month, $37 million plan that is now near completion. I commend the Broward County Board of County Commissioners for their foresight. The fine work they've done should serve as a model for ports around the nation.

As one of the first Members of Congress to introduce comprehensive seaport security legislation, along with my friend and colleague Senator BOB GRAHAM, I am gratified that we are finally completing our work on this most important issue. It is overdue.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to support the U.S. Coast Guard's Armed Drug Interdiction (HITRON) Mission. The HITRON Mission is a unique and important weapon in the arsenal against illegal drugs and counterterrorism. The MH–68A armed helicopter, which was designed, assembled and maintained in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, is an integral part of the HITRON mission. I thank the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. COBLE, for his leadership on this matter. The gentleman from North Carolina and I have been deeply concerned that the short-term lease for the MH–68A expires in January of 2003, potentially jeopardizing the HITRON mission if the lease is not extended in a timely fashion. The Integrated Coast Guard Systems Group (ICGS—led by Lockheed Martin-Northup Grumman) has recommended the Coast Guard fashion a permanent Deep Water airborne use of force (AUF) program and test a heavier multipurpose helicopter for the drug and terrorist intervention mission. While this is certainly a reasonably approach, there must be no interruption in the program before a permanent fleet is fully deployed. I am pleased that the Coast Guard has agreed that there must be no interruption and is executing the lease extension. I join in congratulating the Coast Guard on a successful program.

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LOBIONDO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the conference report on S. 1214.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

Accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 8 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WHITFIELD) at 11 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4628, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at any time to consider the conference report to accompany H.R. 4628; that all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration be waived; and that the conference report be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITFIELD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the unanimous consent request, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 4628) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2003 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of today, the conference report is considered as read.

(For conference report and statement, see prior proceedings of the House of today.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS).

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present the conference report for the fiscal year 2003 intelligence authorization bill. I believe that hard work and careful deliberation have produced a comprehensive bill that funds the critically important work of our intelligence community.

Mr. Speaker, the events over the past year remind us just how critical the intelligence community work is. As has been the longstanding custom of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, this conference report is a bipartisan product which reflects admirably on our committee's members and its highly professional staff. I want to thank all involved. Because of the late hour of the evening, I am not going to enumerate all of the staffers and members, but I think all of them will take satisfaction in knowing that we have had a good year.

At this point, I would like to mention one other important issue. With the conclusion of this conference, the committee will lose the talents of several valued members: the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), who led our Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security, and put out actually the first report on the counterterrorism situation; the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), who led our Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence and has dealt with some of the more challenging problems that confront the Committee on Intelligence; the gentleman from California (Mr. CONDIT) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) on the minority side, who have been heavily involved in some of the issues we will be talking about later; and in particular, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), our esteemed ranking member.

She will graduate, I am told, to ex officio status. It will be a fine graduation. We know she is nearby when we need her. The gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) has made a significant contribution to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence work during her 10 years of service on the committee. Most notable, however, has been her determination to work collectively to rebuild and reenergize our Nation's intelligence capabilities after the September 11 attacks. She has been willing to work energetically and efficiently in a fashion that puts national security first before politics or partisanship. I say to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), or Madam Leader, soon to be, we thank her very much for her efforts.

This conference report authorizes funds for fiscal year 2003 intelligence-related activities, the Community Management Account, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System.

I want to take a very short moment to highlight several provisions of the report for the consideration of the Members. First, the bill includes several provisions designed to strengthen our Nation's fight against international terrorism, including a cross-agency foreign terrorist asset-tracking center to identify and disrupt terrorist financial support networks. I am pleased to report we have had some success at disruption, and I look forward to more.

It also establishes an ongoing notification procedure to assure timely congressional oversight of national security-related financial enforcement actions by the executive branch, something that we have had a lot of discussion about.

Other initiatives of note are several provisions intended to enhance the language-training capacity within intelligence and defense agencies to combat our language shortfalls; again, something that has been a pet project of our committee for a number of years. The bill will enhance the training capacity by establishing a flagship language initiative within the National Security Education Program.

The third area of focus is to strengthen the capacity of the national counterterrorism executive within the Office of the Directorate of the CIA. Several recent espionage cases, most notably the Aldrich Ames case, the Robert Hanssen case, the Ana Montes case, require that we place greater efforts in assessing our counterterrorism vulnerabilities with respect to hostile intelligence services, let alone terrorist-type activity that affect our men and women in the service, even on our own shores, as we are reminded tonight with the matter involving Mir Aimal Kasi.

This legislation recognizes the concern that insufficient attention has been given to the area of counterterrorism.

Finally, I wanted to commend all involved for their diligent work on reaching a compromise on the creation of an independent commission. It shows the American people that we can work together to reach consensus. Sometimes it takes a little longer than we hoped, but usually we get there.

Mr. Speaker, I barely scratched the surface regarding the many issues and investments contained in this bill that go toward protecting our national interests. As we all know, much of it is classified. The only way to be ready to address the diverse threats to our security, both at home and abroad, is by having a vibrant first line of defense, as the President has said, that provides indications and warning. This first line of defense has to start with our intelligence community, and we have to give them the support and the oversight necessary to do that job. This conference report directly helps to strengthen our capabilities, put them on target, and ensures the protection of our rights and liberties, now and in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report and thank the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), our distinguished chairman of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, for his very kind words of farewell to me as I leave the committee after 10 years of service there. It has been a privilege to serve on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence; and as the gentleman said, we always put national security first, so our work there is generally conducted in a bipartisan way, and never more so than under the leadership of our chairman, who has been very bipartisan in his approach and given us the opportunity to air our differences, which largely are not partisan, but just differences of opinion that Republicans and Democrats may share.

In any case, the tenor of his leadership has been one that has been conducive to a very bipartisan atmosphere which is very wholesome for the work that we do, and that work is vital to our country.

So, Mr. Speaker, I thank him for his kind remarks. I congratulate the gentleman on his excellent leadership. It has been an honor to serve with the gentleman, and I look forward to working with the gentleman from the perspective of the Democratic leader.

Mr. Speaker, this is the last bill I will manage from appropriations or from the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence; and I, too, want to join the chairman in thanking our other departing members on the Democratic side, the gentleman from California (Mr. CONDIT) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), for their distinguished leadership on the committee.

We will all benefit from the work of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) tonight when we discuss the independent commission, which is in this bill thanks to his relentless leadership, and also bid adieu to the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), who is going on to other work.

When I joined the committee 10 years ago, the Gulf War had been recently concluded. As I leave as a voting member, the threat of war has returned to the Gulf region. One of the primary purposes of intelligence is to enable U.S. military forces to wage any campaign successfully, with a minimum of casualties. Force protection is our primary responsibility.

Great progress has been made since the Gulf War in using intelligence to improve the accuracy and effectiveness of weapons and in hastening the flow of intelligence to military commanders. Those efforts are sustained appropriately in this conference report.

Equal in importance to the role of intelligence in making certain that wars are won is its role in preventing wars from being fought; some might even say, and I agree, even more important. The conference report, particularly in the emphasis it places on strengthening the intelligence analytic function, should improve the quality of information policymakers and diplomats need to anticipate and resolve problems before they lead to armed confrontation.

The committee's work this year has been influenced greatly by the events of September 11, 2001. Our Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security, chaired by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS) and the ranking member, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN), has been at the forefront of efforts to draw lessons from those events and fashion corrective measures which lessen the chances for successful future attacks.

The conference report has counterterrorism at its highest funding priority. Next year, I expect that with the benefit of the recommendations to be made in the report of the joint September 11 inquiry the committee and its Senate counterpart are conducting, significant changes will be proposed in the way in which the intelligence community conducts its antiterrorism activities.

As thorough as the work of the joint inquiry has been, the dimensions of the September 11 attacks demands an additional kind of review. I am pleased that the conference report will establish a commission to take a comprehensive, independent, I hope, look across the agencies of government at the preparation for, and response to, those horrific events.

I expect that the commission, which I mentioned is in this bill because of the leadership of the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), will benefit greatly from the work of the joint inquiry and the Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security as it undertakes its critical assignment.

The brave and dedicated men and women of the intelligence community perform an invaluable service for our country, and I want them to know how impressed we have all been by the work they do under frequently dangerous and demanding conditions. They deserve our appreciation. The conference report should assist them particularly in the area of language training in ways which will improve their effectiveness in years to come.

Given the uncertainties and complexities of the threats we face, especially those posed by international terrorists and proliferators of weapons of mass destruction, it is imperative that the ranks of intelligence officers be as diverse as possible. Not enough progress has been made in this area despite repeated expressions of interest by members of the committee. I hope greater attention will be paid to this matter in the future.

Mr. Speaker, as I said, I went on the committee 10 years ago. My interest there centered around stopping the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, protecting our civil liberties as we try to gain as much intelligence as possible around the world to protect our forces, and also the prevention of war, as well as protecting us from terrorism. I hope that as we go forward with homeland security, which is essential to our country's security, that we will recall that each one of us takes an oath to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, and as we protect and defend our country we must honor our oath to protect the Constitution and the civil liberties contained therein.

I am very pleased that President Bush has made stopping the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction a high priority. It is a pervasive problem, not only in Iraq but in other places in the world and it must have our attention. The United States must have a policy which is consistent to stop that proliferation.

Mr. Speaker, the capability to acquire intelligence is integral to the security of the American people. The conference report makes an important contribution to maintaining that capability. I commend the chairman for his leadership in putting this bill together and I urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER), the vice chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee that fuses capability and policy, a very challenging job these days.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report addresses a number of pressing intelligence needs. This Member will focus his remarks on only two.

First, the legislation takes important steps to strengthen the intelligence community's analytical core. In recent years certain circumstances have demanded that we focus on terrorists, proliferators and drug traffickers. These are far more difficult targets to track than was the old Soviet Union. Frankly, the intelligence community took far too long to adapt to these new threats. It did not reach out aggressively to recruit human intelligence sources that could have provided us invaluable information.

The community lost far too many skilled analysts whose job it is to provide early warning. This legislation provides much needed funding to build a dynamic, wide-ranging global analytical capability.

A second important component of the intelligence authorization relates to terrorist finances. One of the major intelligence initiatives in the wake of 9/11 has been an attack on the financial assets of terrorist organizations and their supporters.

Terrorist networks such as al Qaeda obviously cannot function without significant financing. And al Qaeda, for example, is supported by, one, a shadowy network of fund-raisers, money lenders, and shakedown artists; two, businesses and charities serving as front organizations; and, three, unscrupulous facilitators and middlemen. However, with the decision of the executive branch to fully exploit the existing authorities to target terrorist finances and with the granting of additional authorities under the U.S. PATRIOT Act, we are now aggressively attacking the money flow. To date over $100 million of suspected terrorist money has been seized or frozen by the United States and its allies and that is just the beginning.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important and powerful tool in the war on terrorism. In order to maintain responsible legislative oversight over this effort, the Intelligence Authorization Act will require semi-annual reports on the number of assets seized, as well as the number of entities or individuals found to have engaged in financial support for terrorism.

It will also require information on the total number of requests for asset seizures that have been granted, denied or modified. This important oversight will ensure the war against terrorism financing remains on track.

In closing, this Member would congratulate the distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) and the distinguished gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) for the leadership they have demonstrated in bringing forth a genuinely bipartisan product. I will say in her existing capacity we will certainly miss the gentlewoman's long and very important experience and contributions on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The conference report is a very serious effort. Each and every member of the committee dedicated long hours to the drafting of the legislation. Each member recognizes the importance of our action. This body can justifiably be proud of our efforts of the HPSCI, I believe, and particularly the leadership of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Finally, and of crucial importance, the staff of the committee is truly excellent in their knowledge and commitment to our oversight and our authorization responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, this Member strongly urges adoption of the conference report of H.R. 4628.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. BISHOP), a distinguished member of the committee and the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report, but before I get started I want to express my own personal gratitude to the leadership of this committee, and most especially to the leadership of our ranking member, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), for the hard work she has done in leading the Democrats on this committee and the contributions that she has made to the committee as a whole.

I believe very strongly that her leadership has worked through the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence to make the world and our country a little more of hope, a little less of fear and a little better because she traveled here, and we are very grateful for her leadership and we will miss her very much. Although she has gone on to more responsibility and we expect equally great things from her there, I do want to say that we certainly are appreciative of her hard work, and we will miss her, and it has meant a tremendous amount to our country and our intelligence community.

The committee worked hard to provide the resources that our military forces and our intelligence community require to prevail in the war on terrorism and to safeguard all of our other national security interests. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS) and the ranking member, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), my counterpart on the Subcommittee on Technical and Tactical Intelligence of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE) and all of the other committee members deserve great credit for this important bipartisan authorization act.

In addition, this conference report adds substantial funds to the budget of the National Imagery and Mapping Agency to enable NIMA to award a contract for a major modernization program. I remain very concerned that the administration failed to budget enough funds for this effort despite the large budget increases following September 11.

The capabilities that this modernization effort will provide are essential for the kind of flexible military operations on display in Afghanistan.

When our bill was being debated in the House earlier this year, I indicated my concern about the Department of Defense's apparent neglect of the communications and exploitation infrastructure needed to support the large fleet of unmanned aerial vehicles that the Department intends to procure over the next several years. These drones performed magnificently in Afghanistan, but this potential will never be realized without a larger investment in the means to get the data back from the aircraft and get it exploited. I had hoped the administration would signal its intention to fix these problems, but this has not happened. Congress must address this matter next year if the administration fails to do so in the fiscal year 2004 budget request.

This conference report also requires that some changes and initiatives be undertaken to correct problems with respect to the sharing of information within and between the intelligence and law enforcement communities.

There is more work to be done in this area, but the direction in this conference report, if implemented faithfully, should help. We understand the importance of protecting sources and methods, but believe that this can be done within a much more expansive information-sharing paradigm.

Finally, I wanted to speak to the implementation of the proposed compensation reform plan. Section 402 of the bill is similar to section 402 of the House bill. The Senate amendment had no similar provision. Section 402 delays implementation of the Central Intelligence Agency's proposed compensation reform plan until February 1, 2004. Prior to that date, the director of Central Intelligence may conduct a pilot project to assess the efficacy and fairness of a revised personnel compensation plan and report to the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence 45 days after completion of the pilot project. Section 402 includes a sense of the Congress that an employee personnel evaluation mechanism with evaluation training for managers and employees of the CIA and the National Security Agency should be phased in first and then followed by introduction of a new compensation plan.

Mr. Speaker, this was a concern that was raised by the employees that has contributed to a great deal of consternation and perhaps some problems that we might anticipate if it were implemented, and I am happy that the conference report reflects the concerns raised on this issue, and that we will first, before having an en masse, grand-scale implementation, first have the pilot program instituted so any kinks or problems can be worked out.

With that, I think it is a good conference report. I think we have done good work, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security, and acknowledge the valuable contribution that subcommittee has made to our national security.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, during this term of Congress, much of my time and passion has been devoted to the activities of this committee and the contents of this conference report. It is a great committee with great bipartisan leadership, membership, and staff. It is with relief, pride and some sadness that I stand here at midnight to urge passage of the conference report.

My special appreciation goes to our ranking member, the esteemed gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), who today achieved an historic first, and who over all of the years that I have served with her on this committee, has distinguished herself with fairness, probity, intelligence, and leadership skills. We will miss her, and we will welcome her back as an ex officio member.

I would also like to use my last statement of the 107th Congress to state my respect and praise for the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), another departing member. It is fitting that one of the last votes of this Congress will fulfill his promise to the families of the 9-11 victims. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) has worked tirelessly and passionately to enact an independent commission to investigate the 9-11 attacks. That commission will be part of this conference report. In fact, the bold actions of the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) and the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) saved the commission, saved the bipartisan tradition of the committee, and reflects the vote a majority of this House took some months ago.

I would finally like to recognize that other colleagues are departing: the gentleman from Delaware (Mr. CASTLE), the gentleman from California (Mr. CONDIT), and especially the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), who is moving to the other body where he will serve on its intelligence committee. I would advise the gentleman if he gets lonely over there, he can come home for advice and counsel.

Mr. Speaker, this is our first real chance after 9-11 to set new directions in the intelligence community, and we do that. We provide substantially more funding, more training, and more support to penetrate, prevent and disrupt the plans of terrorist organizations.

I would say that the Department of Homeland Security legislation that we passed yesterday provides for an integrated strategy to protect the homeland, but that strategy must be built on world-class intelligence. This bill provides that critical base. I urge its passage.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER), a departing member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, yet one who has demonstrated leadership right up to the last day of the Congress to ensure that we have an independent commission and that it would be one that will make our country safer.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) for those kind and generous words.

Abraham Lincoln, when he went from Springfield, Illinois, to Washington, D.C. to take on a new job that he was elected to by the people of the United States, stood on a platform in Springfield, Illinois, and looked out at his hometown people and said to these people and their kindness, "I owe everything."

To the people of Indiana that I have served for the last 12 years in this distinguished body, I owe them everything, for the privilege and the humble responsibility of casting votes on their behalf with common sense and dignity, as we have and will tonight, to try to make this a more secure Nation and a Nation that works together in a bipartisan way to accomplish things.

When I talk about people, I want to commend the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), the chairman of the committee, for his distinguished leadership to bring this bill to the floor tonight in a most dangerous and precarious world.

I want to especially congratulate the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), my good friend and our leader. I have two buttons in my pocket tonight with the gentlewoman's name on them that I will give to my 5-year-old daughter, Sarah, and my 2-year-old daughter, Grace. I think the talent and the dreams of women and people around the world are boundless tonight because of what example she has set. It is not just getting elected, and not only being a woman; it is being a leader and bringing a bill to the floor and keeping this body working into the night to get these things accomplished, like an independent commission.

We do live in a dangerous world where planes can wreak devastation, and a vial of smallpox that can fit in a pocket can kill millions. Therefore, this bill tonight, as the last bill of the 107th Congress, is indeed vital for our Nation's security.

We outline new language, training and proficiency programs in this bill which are funded at higher levels. We improve information sharing to decrease the problems of communication and stove-piping between the FBI and the CIA, and we put more emphasis on human intelligence, which is the most important work that we could do, not just relying on satellites in the sky.

Finally, a great big embrace and thanks for the idealism and effectiveness and hope to the families of the victims of 9-11 who have worked so hard and been such a great example to me of how grassroots work can make this body function better. These families, led by people like Stephen Push and Kristin Breitweiser, have really led us to tonight's success on the creation of this independent commission. It is not everything, it is not perfect, but it has come a long way from opposition and dead-on-arrival predictions that it would go nowhere. We have that in a bipartisan way in this bill tonight.

It still has a lot of challenges, Mr. Speaker, and one is the subpoena power. The linchpin for me of an effective investigative body and a truly independent commission is the ability for this commission to have subpoena power, to threaten the subpoena, to ultimately deliver on it and to get depositions and to pry open doors that want to remain closed. We have that in this bill, especially if Senator McCAIN and Senator SHELBY can have the one appointment that has been promised to them out of the five Republican appointments and that helps us get to this level of six votes that can trigger subpoenas. That is crucial in this. I hope that that colloquy and that gentlemen's agreement and that codified promise is in this bill and in the legislation's intent.

I also hope that we will follow the good path of the joint inquiry. Led by that staff and this great staff here on the floor tonight, we have uncovered a lot of questions, we have a lot of suggestions and recommendations for fixing the problems that led to 9–11, but we have so much more to do in front of us, which this independent commission in a seamless way can undertake and make recommendations for.

In summing up, Mr. Speaker, there is a Shakespeare play where one character says to the other in a bragging way, "I can call spirits from the deep," and the other character says, "Well, anybody can do that, but will they come?" Will they come? I hope and I pray for this most distinguished people's House that we will call forth the very best in us and bring forth the very best ideas and challenge these people in this great country to vote in the next 2 years on great ideas put forward by Republicans and Democrats and some in bipartisan ways to keep this country strong, to move us in a positive direction and do it in the spirit of the founders of this great Nation.

I appreciate the service to this country and wish good things for the people of this body. Thank you very much and Godspeed.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHOOD), a very valued member of our committee and well known to the Members of this body.

Mr. LAHOOD. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think there are two other people in the Chamber that I have more regard for than the chairman of the committee and the ranking member. Both people are very, very hardworking people. They have done extraordinary work for the country. The leadership of Chairman GOSS and our ranking member, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), has just been extraordinary, particularly given what happened after 9–11 and particularly given the events that we have been through in the House and as members of the joint committee studying what happened prior to 9–11. I have really enjoyed the opportunity for the last 4 years to serve with both of these people. I want to say a word about my friend from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) because I know he will be leaving and his service has been valued very much by all the members of the committee. I know that you will be missed, Tim, and I know that it will be a great loss to our committee. And also to you, Madam Leader, you will also be missed and thank you for your service to the committee.

I rise in very, very reluctant opposition to the conference report. As those people on the committee know, I have objected very strenuously to the idea of a commission. Almost from the very first day that this idea has been proposed, I thought it was a bad idea. I have thought it was a bad idea because what is going to happen is you are going to have people with little or no experience, and many of us on the committee have tried to gain experience over the years and tried to gain knowledge in terms of what the community is about, the intelligence-gathering community and how they do their work and what the failures are, and to have some kind of a concept of a so-called blue ribbon committee, I think, really is going to fall far short of what people's expectations are.

I know that some people think this commission is going to provide a lot of answers and provide a lot of opportunity to assuage the feelings of the family members of the victims. I think we are holding out a real, real big false hope for the family members. I have always felt that. Many of us on the committee have tried to become experts. It is difficult to do. But there are people who are experts. I consider Chairman GOSS and I consider Ranking Member PELOSI experts because of the time that they have devoted. I think the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) is an expert because of the time he has devoted. But to try and get 10 people from the outside to come in and understand all of this in such a short period of time I think holds out a very big false hope. It just does not make sense.

I really think this is a mistake. I want people to understand that this is a good bill, it is a good conference report in every other regard except for the idea of holding out a false hope to the families that are left behind of the victims, that somehow this blue ribbon commission is going to be the panacea, that is going to answer all the questions, that is going to lay the blame where it needs to be laid. You know I have characterized this as the blame game commission and I know you do not like to hear me say that, but that is how I feel about it. There are people here that want to try and find blame within the government, whether it is in the CIA or the FBI or within the administration. I characterize this as no more than that, an opportunity for 10 citizens to try and come together and understand something that is so complicated and so complex that it makes little sense to try and hold out hope to people that this will really give the answers to the families that have been left behind. It will not. It simply will not. I think that hopefully our joint committee can offer some answers out of the kind of work that we have done for the last year and will continue to do until the final report is written.

The idea that this is a blue ribbon commission where people are going to be paid, I think, detracts from what kind of a blue ribbon commission is it. It is right in the bill that there are going to be people who are going to be paid for this. Why do we have to pay people to serve on a blue ribbon commission? I wish I would have had an opportunity to at least strike that out of the bill, but we do not have an opportunity to strike these kinds of things out of conference reports. I think the idea of compensation is nonsense. It degrades the commission; it degrades the idea that it is a blue ribbon commission.

The final thing that I would say to my friends here in the House and to colleagues is that this really is an opportunity, I think, for people just prior really to a political election to lay on the table some kind of a report to try and lay blame at the foot of an administration. That is how I see it. This report will come out maybe a few days or a month or two before the next Presidential election. I have no idea what the report will say, but I know there are people out there that want to find blame. I have the feeling that that is what this commission will be out to do, to look for those who made mistakes, to look for those, to find fault with institutions in our government that probably in some ways did not serve the interest the way they should have.

As one Member, and I hate to do it because I know a lot of work has gone into this bill, into this conference report, but I intend to vote against it. I think this is a terrible mistake. It sends a terrible message. I do not want the families out there to think that when this report comes in from some so-called blue ribbon commission, it is going to answer. It is not going to answer.

□ 2350

Some of these things are unanswerable and those of us that have served on the joint committee know that some of these things are unanswerable. So I thank the chairman for the opportunity to speak, and in no way do I want to be degrade any member of the committee, any member who supports this. I just think it is a bad idea, it is a bad time to do it, it does not make sense, and it is going to hold out a false hope that we are never ever going to be able to meet.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa (Mr. BOSWELL), who is the ranking member on the Subcommittee of Human Intelligence, Analysis and Counterintelligence.

Mr. BOSWELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to make the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHOOD), my good friend, feel better. I have tremendous respect for him, and he knows that and I think he does for me. But as I reflect on the time it takes for the efforts gone forth, and I want to commend, as the rest of my colleagues have, our chairman and ranking member for their efforts and the efforts of the staff, but as I have observed the time necessary to go into this kind of depth, I think the blue ribbon commission is very necessary to get the answers that we ought to be able to get. So we reflect on the joint committee and the ability of Members, all the other things that demand our time and so on. I think it becomes pretty clear that we need this extra assistance to give the country and to give those families the information that they need, and they will not be satisfied with anything less.

So I tonight rise in appreciation to support this conference report because its time has come, and the people in this country ought to know that this committee under this leadership, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI), have done everything that they can possibly do to protect our country to be sure that one of their principles of safety, principles of war and principles of safety, is to have good reliable intelligence and to be timely and to be accurate.

So I am very happy to support this conference report. I think it supports the global efforts to counterterrorism and other threats to international security, and the conference report, like the House bill passed in July, reflects a commitment of this committee to invest in the people of the intelligence community and intelligence disciplines across the board, especially human intelligence. The conference reports includes the provisions on language training and proficiency maintenance found in the House bill. The conference report unfortunately delays the effective date of the provisions found in the House bill, setting forth a new authorization for the innovative language training program known as the National Flagship Initiative under the National Security Education Program, NSEP. Although disappointing, it should be noted that both the House and Senate have endorsed the National Flagship Initiative and the conference report includes a provision to ensure that the delay does not affect the ongoing NSEP pilot to fund programs to develop competency at the superior level in languages critical to national security.

Over the last few months, the House and Senate intelligence committees have made significant progress in the joint investigation they have been conducting into the circumstances surrounding the terrorist attacks of September 11. The inquiry, however, has focused on U.S. intelligence agencies and must soon conclude its work. So I support the establishment of the independent commission. I have been disappointed in how long it has taken for the agreement to be reached on whether a commission would be established and how it would be structured, but we are there.

While the final language on the commission may not be satisfactory to everyone, I believe it is important that a commission with a broad mandate and independent authorities be established by statute. I will follow with great interest its work, especially with respect to its investigation beyond the topics addressed by the joint inquiry. I urge the support of this report.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the very distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the members of this committee for the product and the way in which they have done it. I was particularly impressed by the very gracious remarks of the chairman of this committee about his opposite, the ranking minority member, and frankly at a time when there is some political sniping going on that seems to me wholly inaccurate, having him so generously acknowledge the important role the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI) has played on the single most important national security issue now before this Congress is a very impressive act, and I appreciate his doing that. I should underline that what we have here is the gentlewoman from California in her role on this committee having played a wholly responsible constructive role at the center of national policy. I would ask people to contrast that with some of the silly political assassination efforts that are going on.

Speaking of silly, I want to talk about an amendment we need. We have had a policy for driving gay people out of the military lest gay men and women be allowed to help defend this country, and it has been called the policy of Don't Ask, Don't Tell. We have a new name for it. It is called Don't Ask, Don't Tell, Don't Translate, because the Army in its wisdom pursuant to a dictate given to it by this body in its wisdom has just thrown out over the past year nine linguistic specialists, six of whom were studying Arabic. Apparently the Army feels that worrying about what people do in their private lives is more important than enhancing our ability to translate from Arabic. As the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations said, it is a good thing for Lawrence Arabia they were not around when he was getting involved in the Middle East. The notion that they would take people who were studying Arabic, one member of this group had completed 30 weeks of training, he was getting very good marks, he trying to learn Arabic, in the process of learning Arabic, no, we do not want him because he is gay. I understand that anti-gay prejudice gets a certain leeway here. I have been fighting against that, but to put it ahead of national security seems to me excessive. We have been told that we have a problem because we do not have enough skillful linguists. So when they kick out six Arabic speakers, two Korean speakers, and someone who speaks Mandarin Chinese, I am appalled. And let us be clear that while there is a policy on the books of which I do not approve, it is not self-executing. The military has the discretion not to apply it in some cases, and to expel from the military American citizens who are motivated by the most profound patriotism and are in the process of learning Arabic at a time when that is essential to national security, to kick them out because they are gay is preposterous, and while it is late in the session and late in the evening, too late I hope for my colleagues to bring up that bankruptcy bill they were playing with, I hope when we return next year we will look at this Don't Ask, Don't Tell, Don't Translate policy, and the notion that the Federal Government at this time should deprive itself of skillful people who want to work for national security in translating from Arabic into English and from Chinese and Korean into English, the notion that we would deny ourselves this greatly needed asset because some people do not like people like me is as silly as I can think. We are not here talking about trivia. We are not talking about anything superficial. We are talking about prejudice being elevated over national security.

Mr. Speaker, I include in the RECORD at this point an article from the AP by Margie Mason and an article from the New Republic by Nathaniel Frank which document this particular piece of stupidity.

[From the Associated Press]

MILITARY DISMISSES 6 GAY ARABIC LINGUISTS AMID SHORTAGE OF TRANSLATORS

(By Margie Mason)

SAN FRANCISCO.—Nine Army linguists, including six trained to speak Arabic, have been dismissed from the military because they are gay.

The soldiers' dismissals come at a time when the military is facing a critical shortage of translators and interpreters for the war on terrorism.

Seven of the soldiers were discharged after telling superiors they are gay, and the two others got in trouble when they were caught together after curfew, said Steve Ralls, spokesman for the Servicemembers Legal Defense Network, a group that defends homosexuals in the military.

Six were specializing in Arabic, two were studying Korean and one was studying Mandarin Chinese. All were at the Defense Language Institute in Monterey, the military's primary language training center.

The government has aggressively recruited Arabic speakers since the Sept. 11 attacks.

"We face a drastic shortage of linguists, and the direct impact of Arabic speakers is a particular problem," said Donald R. Hamilton, who documented the need for more linguists in a report to Congress as part of the National Commission on Terrorism.

One of the discharged linguists said the military's policy on gays is hurting its cause.

"It's not a gay-rights issue. I'm arguing military proficiency issues. They're throwing out good, quality people," said Alastair Gamble, a former Army specialist.

Harvey Perritt, spokesman for the Army Training and Doctrine Command at Fort Monroe in Tidewater, Va., confirmed the dismissals occurred between October 2001 and September 2002, but declined to comment further on the cases.

He said 516 linguists enrolled in the Arabic course this year at the Monterey institute and 365 graduated.

The military's "don't ask, don't tell" policy allows gays to serve provided they keep quiet about their sexual orientation.

Gamble and former Pfc. Robert Hicks were discovered in Gamble's room during a surprise inspection in April, Gamble said.

After their discharges, Gamble and Hicks applied for other federal jobs where they could use their language skills in the war on terrorism, but neither was hired, Gamble said.

"Don't Ask, Don't Tell" v. the War on Terrorism

(By Nathaniel Frank)

On October 25, one week after CIA Director George Tenet warned that the United States now faces a terrorist threat every bit as grave as it did the summer before the September 11 attacks, the Council on Foreign Relations issued the most sobering report to date: "America remains dangerously unprepared to prevent and respond to a catastrophic terrorist attack. In all likelihood, the next attack will result in even greater casualties and widespread disruption to American lives and the economy."

The key to preventing that kind of calamity, most experts agree, is intelligence. And one of the basic requirements of good intelligence about the Arab world is the ability to speak its language. Unfortunately, study after study has indicated that the U.S. government faces a severe shortage of Arabic speakers. Less than one month after September 11, 2001, a House Intelligence Committee report criticized the FBI, CIA, and National Security Agency (NSA) for relying on "intelligence generalists" rather than linguists with expertise in a specific foreign language, culture, and geographical area. The report concluded that "at the NSA and CIA, thousands of pieces of data are never analyzed, or are analyzed 'after the fact' because there are too few analysts; even fewer with the necessary language skills. Written materials can sit for months, and sometimes years, before a linguist with proper security clearances and skills can begin a translation." According to a Government Accounting Office (GAO) study released in January 2002, in 2001, the U.S. Army, FBI, and State and Commerce Departments failed to fill all their jobs that required expertise in Arabic, Chinese, Korean, Farsi, or Russian. The GAO study concluded that staff shortages at these agencies "have adversely affected agency operations and compromised U.S. military, law enforcement, intelligence, counterterrorism and diplomatic efforts." As recently as last month, the Associated Press reported that the Army faces such a critical shortage of Arabic speakers that it is considering recruiting non-Americans from Middle Eastern countries into its Special Forces teams.

Which makes it all the more shocking that, in a two-month period this fall, the Defense Language Institute (DLI)—an elite training school for military linguists in Monterey, California—discharged seven fully competent Arabic linguists. The reason? They were discovered to be gay.

DLI is a language-training center run by the Army, but soldiers from all major military branches study there. Because of its battery of entrance tests and the intensity of its courses, DLI is reputed to attract students who are older and more skilled than most enlisted personnel. Its Northern California location also, it seems, attracts a large share of gay students. "There were way too many gay people at DLI for anybody to fear the 'don't ask, don't tell' policy," says one gay former student who arrived at DLI in 2001. While there, he was out to all his gay peers and to any enlisted personnel who seemed gay-friendly. "Nobody cared," he explains. "I knew someone who was a flaming queen in a uniform, and nobody cared. Sometimes we lived on halls that were more than 50 percent homosexual. ...I never even got a sideways glance."

Still, this tolerant atmosphere does not extend to commanders, who, when a soldier's homosexuality is clearly discovered, are forced by federal law to pursue and expel him. This includes highly trained linguists like Alastair Gamble, an Emory University-educated Army specialist fired from DLI this August after completing more than 30 weeks of intensive Arabic. (DLI's Arabic course requires 63 weeks for a basic knowledge, compared with only 25 weeks for Spanish, French, Italian, or Portuguese, and only the strongest students are selected to take it.) Gamble was a human-intelligence collector, a position the GAO report cited as one of the Army's "greatest foreign language needs." And Gamble was a catch for DLI in other ways, too. He had studied German for seven years in high school and continued in college, where he also studied Latin and linguistics. Once in the Army, he completed interrogation training, a nine-week intelligence course that trains a small number of soldiers to collect information through direct questioning techniques. He then spent six weeks working for the Foreign Area Officer program, which trains officers to work with U.S. allies, where his performance won him a Certificate of Commendation from his commander. He entered DLI in June 2001 to study Arabic and earned a perfect 300 on his physical fitness test. Gamble reports that his grades placed him at the top of his class and that several teachers told him they thought he was the strongest student in the class.

In April, Gamble was finishing his second semester of the Arabic basic course at DLI when, during a surprise "health and welfare" inspection at 3:30 a.m., he was caught in his room with his boyfriend, also an army language specialist. (In eight months of dating, the two men say they had never before broken visitation policies. But Gamble's boyfriend was nearing the end of his course and preparing to relocate to Goodfellow Air Force Base in Texas. As their separation approached, they decided they could risk one night of sleeping side by side.) After the two men were found in bed, nearly a dozen people searched the room while Gamble was escorted to his First Sergeant's office. Gamble says he was not yet thinking about being discharged. "I was just absolutely embarrassed," he recalls. "There's really nothing like having someone who's your age, but a slight rank above you, discussing whether or not lube is sufficient evidence to prove homosexuality. It's like getting felt up; it's horrible." The search turned up a gay-themed, non-pornographic film, photographs showing affectionate, but not sexual, behavior between Gamble and his boyfriend, and several gift cards expressing romantic sentiments. Two weeks later, Gamble was officially notified that his unit was initiating an investigation into his sexual orientation. He was pulled from class and honorably discharged on August 2. About eight weeks later, his boyfriend was discharged as well.

Gamble and his boyfriend are not alone. The Servicemembers Legal Defense Network (SLDN), a legal aid and advocacy organization that assists men and women harmed by "don't ask, don't tell," announced in its latest quarterly report that it had assisted six other Arabic speakers recently discharged from DLI for being gay. Though only two chose to speak publicly, SLDN reports that all seven soldiers were fired while in the midst of, or having completed, the intensive DLI Arabic training course.

The army has cast the firings as routine enforcement of Army regulations. Harvey Perritt, a spokesman for U.S. Army Training and Doctrine Command, says the expulsions of competent Arabic linguists are "not relevant" to the nation's current war against largely Arabic-speaking terrorists. He insists that discharges resulting from "don't ask, don't tell" are consistent with those for other violations of Army regulations. "If someone is enrolled somewhere and they don't pass the P.T. [physical training] standards," he says, by way of comparison, "they'll be discharged. There are policies and they are always in effect."

But, regardless of what you believe about gays in the military, that's just not true. Both during the Gulf war and after the September 11 attacks, the Pentagon authorized "stop-loss" orders, allowing branch secretaries to retain soldiers who would otherwise be discharged for committing petty crimes, minor physical shortcomings, or other reasons. What's more, the military even has a history of suspending personnel policies regarding gays and lesbians during wartime, when it needs maximum retention of soldiers. In 1991, The Wall Street Journal reported that the Pentagon had allowed homosexuals to serve in the Persian Gulf, despite a ban on all gay service, and only moved to discharge several gay veterans after the war ended. For his best-selling 1993 book, Conduct Unbecoming, the late San Francisco Chronicle reporter Randy Shilts interviewed two Arab-language specialists fired from the Army for being gay. According to Shilts, the NSA contacted the two when the Gulf war began, begging them to return to service to help the war effort. (The two men declined.)

In other words, the military implicitly acknowledges that, during wartime, the gay ban may undermine national security rather than protect it. And since its leaders have consistently argued that national security should be the only criterion for determining whether gays should serve, it may be time for a new look at an "interim" policy formulated nearly ten years ago. Today's war on terrorism is less about squadrons and battalions than about deciphering the behavior of a shadowy enemy who attacks in secret. For national security's sake, let's hope our leaders are finally ready to acknowledge in public what they're admitted privately for quite some time: It is this enemy that threatens our nation's freedoms and survival, not the open homosexuality of patriotic Americans standing ready to serve.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to associate myself with the concerns expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK) regarding putting national security second to anything. It is our first priority to protect the American people. It is in the Preamble to the Constitution first to provide for the common defense and we really must revisit this idea, especially at the time of such tremendous need for linguistic skills, especially in the languages expressed by the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. FRANK).

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to thank so many people who made this bill possible, my distinguished chairman for sure, all of the members of the committee acting in bipartisan fashion, and I want to commend the wonderful staff that we have. I want to acknowledge on the Democratic side our counsel Mike Sheehy who heads up the Democratic staff. We do not really think in terms of Democrat and Republican. It just somehow breaks down that way.

But we act in a very bipartisan way, members and staff. Chris Healey, Beth Larson, Ilene Romack, Wyndee Parker, Carolyn Bartholomew, Bob Emmett, Kirk McConnell, Marcel Lettre and, again, Mike Sheehy, who heads up our side. I want to commend Tim Sample, who is the major honcho staff person of the Committee, Chris Bartow, Mike Meermans and all of the other members of the staff for all of their hard work.

Mr. Speaker, I want to just respond briefly, because the hour is late, very briefly, to the very serious concerns and the sincerity in which they were expressed by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHOOD). The purpose of the commission is not to assign blame; it is to find out why and how 9–11 happened. I agree with the gentleman, if the purpose is to assign blame, we should not have the commission. That would not be constructive. But we must try our very best to make sure that a 9–11 or anything like it does not happen again; and in order to do that, we have to get to the bottom of it.

This commission will build on the work of the Joint Inquiry, in which this committee and the Senate committee have been engaged, and we are very pleased with the work of our staff director, Eleanor Hill, and the very, very able staff of the inquiry. It will build on that.

But this commission, the purpose of it is to have fresh eyes take a new fresh look at what happened and also to go beyond those agencies of government that the inquiry has looked at, to look at every agency of government that had any responsibility for protecting the American people from terrorism.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, I would just say as we go into this commission, we are walking on hallowed ground. There is no place for politics or assigning blame here, but we do have a responsibility to reduce risk to the American people, to find answers as to why 9–11 happened, to prevent it from happening again, to provide comfort to the families who have been a source of strength. We try to console them. They are an inspiration and a source of strength to us, as the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) indicated.

Whatever we do, we must bring honor to the memory of those who lost their lives on September 11. I think our work in the Joint Inquiry is an excellent product, will be an excellent product when the report comes out, and that this work of the independent commission will bring honor to the memory of those who died as well.

Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that we always have in the intelligence community many options and many things to consider; and while we do it on a bipartisan basis, we do not always agree on what are the best ways to proceed when you are dealing with some very complex questions of national security. Part of the richness of the judgment of our committee, I think, is we do have many perspectives, and we have heard some of them here tonight. I think that bodes well for our institution.

I would also, in addition to thanking the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. ROEMER) for his persistence and commitment to the idea of where we go next from the Joint Committee with our review process, like to underscore that other Members have been very helpful in the breakthrough. Certainly Members of the other body as well, but I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS) in particular, who has been referred to already as the gentleman who led with the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN) the Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security effort, which was very important and a landmark piece for our work. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS) was also a man who was instrumental in the breakthrough on the compromise that we came through on the independent commission. So I think that he is owed a special thanks for that.

For the family groups, the survivors of 9–11, Stephen Push and Kristin Breitweiser and so forth, we referred to them and spent hours talking to them, I suppose, collectively between all of us.

We all know that we have a responsibility, and I totally agree with my distinguished ranking member about the hallowed ground involved. I do not suppose a day has gone by since 9–11 that I and other members of our committee and perhaps all of us in the room have not thought, is there something we missed? Should we have known? Did we fail in our oversight? Did something go wrong? Was there a smoking gun? Did we somehow fail the American people? Were we derelict in our duty? I can honestly look Kristin Breitweiser and Stephen Push or anybody else in the eye and say I know of no such failure. I know of collectively a lot of things we could have done better, but I see nothing yet that leads me to a smoking gun.

This year we have joined with the other body in doing a very intense review of the 9–11 event. It is not over. We will be issuing a report and that will lead to further efforts. That is appropriate. We will see where that takes us.

The question still needs to be asked and will continue to need to be asked, did we miss something? Did we do our oversight right? I hope the next commission on oversight, on the 9–11 review, will in fact come back to the congressional oversight and find out if we did our job properly.

I think we are accountable on these committees. I am certainly prepared for that, and I would love the opportunity to answer questions and give the point of view of the committee, because I am very proud of the effort that our committee has put into that. But it does not mean we have all the wisdom or judgment in the world.

Besides that review, we have tried very hard to make sure we understand the nature of the threat we are fighting in the war on terrorism and anthrax and propaganda and all the other miscreants that we deal with now on the basis of whether they are terrorists or violators of law. We are not quite sure, but they need to be stopped in their tracks. So we are fighting a global war, and we have got men and women out there taking risks, taking chances, doing hard work and sometimes, sadly, getting killed. Those people we owe a responsibility to.

The oversight and the advocacy role of our committee is on their behalf as well, to make sure they have the tools, the training, the capabilities they need to do their job, to protect all of us and to make sure in this very specialized area of intelligence they are operating in bounds, because we have promised the American people, our constituency, that we will make sure that we never violate our pledge to the American people that we will not spy on the American people. We will preserve our liberty. So we take that very seriously as well.

Then I think we come to the next question, and that is the question of catching the perpetrators of 9-11. Certainly we have not got them all, and certainly we have learned in the past 48 hours or so that Osama bin Laden himself may still be alive. This is ongoing. It will require patience, and it will require commitment. I would thank the members of the committee, the members of the staff and all who have helped us in that commitment, because that commitment remains before this body.

On behalf of the American people, I urge support for this very important bill.

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Intelligence Authorization bill, and I thank my friend and colleague from Florida for yielding me this time.

This is a very good bill. It addresses intelligence needs that were identified in past years by the Intelligence Committee. But only in the past year, after the deaths of innocent Americans, and innocent citizens of other countries, are these needs getting the broad attention they deserve.

Throughout much of the 1990's, after the end of the Cold War, there was a debate about whether America really needed to spend so much money on defense. As for intelligence, some people even said there was no longer any need for the CIA. I believe that debate is now over.

The bill before you today will help the intelligence agencies increase and sharpen their effectiveness—especially against terrorist groups.

If you want to know the plans and intentions of terrorist groups you have to have HUMINT—"human intelligence". This is the information you get from human sources—also known as "assets" or "agents" or simply "spies". I want to emphasize that this year's intelligence authorization bill does a great deal to strengthen our HUMINT capability. For one thing, there is money to hire more CIA operations officers.

CIA's operations officers are doing a great job, but they are few and far between. We need more, and this bill will help ensure that there will be more. This bill also provides money to hire more intelligence analysts and linguists. Likewise, there is money for more foreign language training. It is not hard to understand that if your operations officers and analysts have not learned the language of your enemy, you will not succeed in learning his plans and intentions.

These HUMINT and foreign language-related items are just some of the good provisions of this Intelligence Authorization bill. They are long overdue.

The clock is ticking, and America's enemies continue with their planning. I urge your support for our intelligence professionals, and I urge your support for this bill.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHITFIELD). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. LAHOOD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 366, nays 3, not voting 62, as follows:

Mr. KERNS changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. ALLEN changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. PASCRELL. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 483, I was unavoidably absent. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 4628 and the conference report just considered and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

TRIBUTE TO TERRY MORRIS

(Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor our friend, my neighbor, Terry Morris, the Tally Clerk of the House, who is going to retire this December after 33 years of service to the House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, Terry accepted a position as Assistant Tally Clerk 33 years ago, and 16 years later he took over the helm as the Chief Tally Clerk, responsible for all votes in the House of Representatives. At the time of his retirement, Terry will have served longer in the House than all but 5 of the 435 currently serving Members.

During Terry Morris' tenure, the House has voted on the Gulf War, giving 18-year-olds the right to vote, impeachment, on antiterrorism measures in the wake of the attacks on September 11, and on authorizing the President to use military force against the threat of weapons of mass destruction from Iraq.

Terry's professional objectivity and down-to-earth style have made him many friends among Members on both sides of the aisle, particularly among new Members, whom he assists in familiarizing themselves with voting procedures. Terry's service has spanned both Democratic and Republican majorities, during which time his goal has always been to serve the whole House of Representatives, regardless of party.

Perhaps Terry's most unusual and important day as Tally Clerk came on December 19, 1998, when the House took four votes over a period of 2 hours on four separate articles of impeachment, two of which passed and two of which failed. Terry has been quoted as saying, "Of the thousands of votes I had taken in my career, I knew this would be the most significant."

Terry is originally from Madison, Wisconsin, where he majored in political science at the University of Wisconsin at Madison. Terry and his wife, Barbara, have two sons, Tim, a senior at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg, Virginia, and Christopher, a sophomore at Bishop O'Connell High School in Arlington, Virginia. Terry is an avid golfer and tennis player, and one of the founders of the Capitol Hill Tennis Club. In his retirement, Terry intends to spend more time golfing, playing tennis and visiting friends around the country.

So we wish you Godspeed, Terry. We thank you for everything that you have given of yourself to this institution. We are the better for having known you, and the poorer for your leaving. We will not forget you.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, let me simply say in addition to being educated at the University of Wisconsin, where he did receive a degree in political science, I would point out that I knew him before he worked here when he was a page in the Wisconsin Legislature, when he looked just a little bit younger than both he and I look tonight.

I just want to say that I know that every day the American people look in on this institution on C-SPAN and they see these faces at the desk, they have no idea who these people are and what they do. They have no idea the contribution they make to the Republic. Terry has done everything except the one thing which is impossible: It has been impossible for him to make us look better than we deserve, and so we are going to have to let it go at that.

Terry, we wish you luck in retirement.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to take a moment to add to the words of my colleagues about a most unusual man.

Terry Morris sits at that desk, impeccable in his dress, never a hair out of place, a smile on his face, serving day in and day out. He goes so far as to remind Members they have not voted by looking for them in every imaginable way, connecting with his eyes, reminding Members they have voted twice and they should not do that. He is perhaps one of the friendliest clerks and assistant that we have in this House. He helps Members regardless of party, and he has made friends on both sides of the aisle.

One of my joys in this House is coming in and seeing his face, speaking with him, exchanging a few words and just knowing he is going to be there for me and all of us. I am sorry to see him leave. He is one of those persons we would like to have stay forever; but after 33 years he deserves to retire. I wish him well.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) has mentioned all of the specifics of Terry Morris' life, I would just add that he is a constituent of mine. I am proud that is the case. But in so many ways, he is a constituent of this entire United States Congress. This is where he chose to spend most of his life, 33 years. Imagine, he has been up there for 33 years, 16 years as Assistant Clerk, and the last 17 as the Chief Tally Clerk.

As our colleague just stated, we take it for granted, every time we pass in that vote, Terry is smiling. He is looking professional. He is even looking alert. Here it is after midnight, and he is still smiling and looking alert. I do not know that we can do it. He does it day in and day out in such a way that we take it for granted. That is the kind of professionalism that the American public counts on.

□ 0050

When they have seen him on C-SPAN, I know he has just been sort of part of the institution, but the people listening in and who may one day read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD ought to know that in many ways there is no more prized servant of the American people than Terry Morris has proven himself to be.

And so for the person you are and for what you have contributed to this institution, Terry, we will forever be grateful. Thank you.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL).

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Virginia for yielding. I rise today to pay tribute to Terry Morris, who is retiring after 33 years of distinguished service to this House of Representatives. He has served as an assistant tally clerk and has fulfilled the duties of chief tally clerk for the past 16 years and more with great distinction. He is one of those who quietly and in an unassuming fashion makes this House of Representatives work.

In a body which is characterized by high levels of partisanship and by strong feelings, I would note that he has not only served with distinction but with fairness, and he has served well. He is known for his professional and friendly personality and for the fact that he has carried out his responsibilities with dignity, with respect for the institution, and with good faith towards all of the Members of this body. He has been an officer of this House for 33 years. He has seen history made. He has worked on many difficult and complex issues with fairness and impartiality. His service has spanned the careers of five Democratic Speakers and two Republican Speakers of this House. I speak not only on my own behalf but on behalf of his many friends in this institution when I commend him for his work and for his effort.

All of us here offer our best wishes and gratitude to him for his service and to his wife, Barbara. We wish them great happiness and the best of all things as they embark on a new chapter in their lives. All of us say to Terry Morris, not only thank you, but well done, Terry. We are grateful for what you have done for us.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. KIND).

Mr. KIND. I thank my friend for yielding. As someone who hails from our neck of the woods and whose family is still sprinkled in many of our congressional districts, it is with special pride that we are here to honor you and to thank you for your many years of service in this great House, Terry. I was just 5 years old when you started your career here. Not to date you, but you have lived through eight administrations and seven separate Speakers of the House of Representatives. So I think it is safe to say that you are a great repository of a lot of the institutional memory that exists in this place. Besides you and Charlie, I think you two are the only two who probably recall the Members whose names we are honoring on courthouses and post offices throughout this country virtually every week out here. But I also want to thank you for what you mean for our government.

There is a lot of cynicism in regards to our political system today, and a lot of times that is because the only thing people back home see is the partisan clashes and the heated debates that we have. I feel it is part of our obligation to go home and report to people who do not see what we get to see how well our government functions and the fact that we have thousands of employees, in the Federal agencies, in our offices, in this House who wake up every morning with the sole goal of trying to improve this great country of ours. You do it with honor, you do it with integrity, and you do it with a lot of style and a lot of class. That is why I, after my third term, am even more hopeful and optimistic about this great government of ours, because of people like you.

I just have one request before you do leave, and that is to make sure that you download all the information that is in your brain and make sure it is all written so that we do not have to recreate the wheel. I will never forget the story you told me that after one of the late tally votes, which is seldom held around here anymore, someone asked you where the written procedure is for the tally vote, and you looked at them with a blank expression and said, "There is no written procedure. It's right here." Everyone was shocked and horrified that you were going to go home that night being the only one with the knowledge on how to do this type of work. So you sat down before you went home and actually wrote out what the procedure is like.

Again, we thank you for your great service. I personally thank you for all the conversations and the advice that you have given me. We wish you and Barbara and the two boys all the best in your retirement. Thank you very much.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. KILDEE).

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, a very loyal and distinguished member of the House staff is retiring after 33 years. I personally owe much to him for helping me preserve my longtime voting record. More than once he has advised the Speaker that I had not yet arrived. I am grateful to him for that. Terry's service has spanned five Democratic Speakers and two Republican Speakers of the House. Many people can spend 33 years here and never have to vote on the awesome question of war or impeachment. He has experienced both of those awesome questions here in his responsibility.

Terry and his wife, Barbara, have two sons: Tim, a senior at Mary Washington College in Fredericksburg, Virginia, and Christopher, a sophomore at Bishop O'Connell High School in Arlington, Virginia.

Terry will be greatly missed. He is a friend of this House. He is a personal friend of mine. I am a better person because of Terry Morris.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Wisconsin (Ms. BALDWIN).

Ms. BALDWIN. Terry, as a fellow Madisonian and a fellow Wisconsinite, you have made us very proud. Terry reminds me of what is great about the people of Wisconsin. We are actively involved in our democracy and government, and we have an outstanding work ethic. Wisconsinites understand what it means to serve their country; and Terry Morris has done so impeccably, in both his capacity as assistant tally clerk and as chief tally clerk. He has been a good friend to me in our frequent reminiscences about Wisconsin and Madison. I will miss you very much. Terry, thank you so very much for your service to this House and this Nation. You make Wisconsin proud. You make all of us proud. Best wishes in your retirement.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER).

Mr. HOYER. Terry, your service has been recalled and set before us. All of us appreciate your service, that is clear. I think you are emblematic of the fine service that is given by those of you who do not get to speak on this floor, those of you whose names do not scroll across the screen, those of you who work anonymously but so effectively on behalf of the American public. Terry, I wanted to add my thanks and the thanks of all the Members of this side of the aisle, along with TOM on behalf of all the Members on that side of the aisle, because you work not in a partisan sense but you work for this institution to ensure that the people's House functions as the people would like. As TOM DAVIS said, we will miss you. You have served your country well. God bless you.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 333, BANKRUPTCY ABUSE PREVENTION AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2002

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 333) to amend title 11, United States Code, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Pursuant to clause 8, subsection C of rule XXII, the conference report is considered read.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. BLUNT. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order under clause 9 of rule XXII that the conference report includes matter outside the scope of the differences between the two Houses that were committed to the conference committee for resolution. I specifically cite section 331 of the conference report which is described in the joint explanatory statement of the managers as having no counterpart in either the House bill or the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does any other Member wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, I wish to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I gather that this point of order is being lodged by the leadership of the House against the very bill that the leadership of the House was trying to persuade Members to vote for a couple of hours ago. So my concern is, how did a bill that was perfectly in order at about 8 o'clock fall out of order?

□ 0100

And I am concerned that we have a situation in which the leadership of this House apparently consciously brought forward a bill that they knew to be violative of the rules of the House, sought to pass it, and when not enough arms could be twisted, they now have become late converts to the rules.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. FRANK. So, Mr. Speaker, I do have a parliamentary inquiry. I am sorry the gentlemen do not want to hear this flip-flop, but I did not bring it up. I have a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker, which I believe is regular order. You might want to explain to a few of them over there. I understand on that side knowledge and commitment to the rules is a sometime thing, but a parliamentary inquiry is in order.

Is this bill against which the point of order has been lodged exactly the same bill that the leadership was trying to get people to vote for a few hours ago?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The gentleman has not raised a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FRANK. The parliamentary inquiry is, is this the same piece of legislation on which we voted a couple of hours ago? I think a parliamentary inquiry is relevant when we ask about what is in fact before the House. I have not had a chance to read it. Is this the same bill that the House was voting on a few hours ago?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The conference report called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) that is the object of the pending point of order was earlier the object of House Resolution 606, which the House rejected. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) may make a motion after the Chair rules. He has not made that and it is not pending before the House now.

Mr. FRANK. Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, but the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT) has made a point of order against something. I guess that is the question. The parliamentary inquiry is against what it is that the gentleman from Missouri has lodged a point of order? You said does anyone want to be heard on the point of order. He made a point of order. Against what vehicle did he make a point of order, then?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order is against the conference report against which no points of order have been waived.

Mr. FRANK. So the point of order is against the very conference report that this leadership which is now making the point of order tried to pass. I have heard about being born again in some context,. but born again parliamentarian is a new concept to me, and I think it ought to be clear. I want to be heard on the point of order, and I want to say that I want to defend the House leadership. If you sustain this point of order, you will be ruling that the very bill this House leadership tried to get majority Members to vote for a few hours ago was out of order. I do not think we ought to have the ruling calling into question the fealty of the House Republican leadership to the Rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does any other Member wish to be heard on the point of order?

If not, for the reasons stated by the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. BLUNT) the point of order is sustained and the conference report is vitiated.

CONCURRING IN SENATE AMENDMENT, WITH AN AMENDMENT, TO H.R. 333, BANKRUPTCY ABUSE PREVENTION AND CONSUMER PROTECTION ACT OF 2001

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion.

TITLE I—NEEDS-BASED BANKRUPTCY

SEC. 101. CONVERSION.

Section 706(c) of title 11, United States Code, is amended by inserting “or consents to” after “requests”.

SEC. 102. DISMISSAL OR CONVERSION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 707 of title 11, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking the section heading and inserting the following:

“§ 707. Dismissal of a case or conversion to a case under chapter 11 or 13”;

and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by inserting “(1)” after “(b)”;

(B) in paragraph (1), as so redesignated by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph—

(i) in the first sentence—

(I) by striking “but not at the request or suggestion of” and inserting “trustee, bankruptcy administrator, or”;

(II) by inserting “, or, with the debtor's consent, convert such a case to a case under chapter 11 or 13 of this title,” after “consumer debts”; and

(III) by striking “a substantial abuse” and inserting “an abuse”; and

(ii) by striking the next to last sentence; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

“(2)(A)(i) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter, the court shall presume abuse exists if the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv), and multiplied by 60 is not less than the lesser of—

“(I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims in the case, or $6,000, whichever is greater; or

“(II) $10,000.

“(ii)(I) The debtor's monthly expenses shall be the debtor's applicable monthly expense amounts specified under the National Standards and Local Standards, and the debtor's actual monthly expenses for the categories specified as Other Necessary Expenses issued by the Internal Revenue Service for the area in which the debtor resides, as in effect on the date of the entry of the order for relief, for the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case, if the spouse is not otherwise a dependent. Notwithstanding any other provision of this clause, the monthly expenses of the debtor shall not include any payments for debts. In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses shall include the debtor's reasonably necessary expenses incurred to maintain the safety of the debtor and the family of the debtor from family violence as identified under section 309 of the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, or other applicable Federal law. The expenses included in the debtor's monthly expenses described in the preceding sentence shall be kept confidential by the court. In addition, if it is demonstrated that it is reasonable and necessary, the debtor's monthly expenses may also include an additional allowance for food and clothing of up to 5 percent of the food and clothing categories as specified by the National Standards issued by the Internal Revenue Service.

“(II) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include, if applicable, the continuation of actual expenses paid by the debtor that are reasonable and necessary for care and support of an elderly, chronically ill, or disabled household member or member of the debtor's immediate family (including parents, grandparents, siblings, children, and grandchildren of the debtor, the dependents of the debtor, and the spouse of the debtor in a joint case who is not a dependent) and who is unable to pay for such reasonable and necessary expenses.

“(III) In addition, for a debtor eligible for chapter 13, the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual administrative expenses of administering a chapter 13 plan for the district in which the debtor resides, up to an amount of 10 percent of the projected plan payments, as determined under schedules issued by the Executive Office for United States Trustees.

“(IV) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include the actual expenses for each dependent child less than 18 years of age, not to exceed $1,500 per year per child, to attend a private or public elementary or secondary school if the debtor provides documentation of such expenses and a detailed explanation of why such expenses are reasonable and necessary, and why such expenses are not already accounted for in the National Standards, Local Standards, or Other Necessary Expenses referred to in subclause (I)

“(V) In addition, the debtor's monthly expenses may include an allowance for housing and utilities, in excess of the allowance specified by the Local Standards for housing and utilities issued by the Internal Revenue Service, based on the actual expenses for home energy costs if the debtor provides documentation of such actual expenses and demonstrates that such actual expenses are reasonable and necessary.

“(iii) The debtor's average monthly payments on account of secured debts shall be calculated as the sum of—

“(I) the total of all amounts scheduled as contractually due to secured creditors in each month of the 60 months following the date of the petition; and

“(II) any additional payments to secured creditors necessary for the debtor, in filing a plan under chapter 13 of this title, to maintain possession of the debtor's primary residence, motor vehicle, or other property necessary for the support of the debtor and the debtor's dependents, that serves as collateral for secured debts;

divided by 60.

“(iv) The debtor's expenses for payment of all priority claims (including priority child support and alimony claims) shall be calculated as the total amount of debts entitled to priority, divided by 60.

“(B)(i) In any proceeding brought under this subsection, the presumption of abuse may only be rebutted by demonstrating special circumstances that justify additional expenses or adjustments of current monthly income for which there is no reasonable alternative.

“(ii) In order to establish special circumstances, the debtor shall be required to itemize each additional expense or adjustment of income and to provide—

“(I) documentation for such expense or adjustment to income; and “(II) a detailed explanation of the special circumstances that make such expenses or adjustment to income necessary and reasonable.

“(iii) The debtor shall attest under oath to the accuracy of any information provided to demonstrate that additional expenses or adjustments to income are required.

“(iv) The presumption of abuse may only be rebutted if the additional expenses or adjustments to income referred to in clause (i) cause the product of the debtor's current monthly income reduced by the amounts determined under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) of subparagraph (A) when multiplied by 60 to be less than the lesser of—

“(I) 25 percent of the debtor's nonpriority unsecured claims, or $6,000, whichever is greater; or

“(II) $10,000.

“(C) As part of the schedule of current income and expenditures required under section 521, the debtor shall include a statement of the debtor's current monthly income, and the calculations that determine whether a presumption arises under subparagraph (A)(i), that shows how each such amount is calculated.

“(3) In considering under paragraph (1) whether the granting of relief would be an abuse of the provisions of this chapter in a case in which the presumption in subparagraph (A)(i) of such paragraph does not apply or has been rebutted, the court shall consider—

“(A) whether the debtor filed the petition in bad faith; or

“(B) the totality of the circumstances (including whether the debtor seeks to reject a personal services contract and the financial need for such rejection as sought by the debtor) of the debtor's financial situation demonstrates abuse.

“(4)(A) The court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with the procedures described in rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, may order the attorney for the debtor to reimburse the trustee for all reasonable costs in prosecuting a motion filed under section 707(b), including reasonable attorneys' fees, if—

“(i) a trustee files a motion for dismissal or conversion under this subsection; and

“(ii) the court—

“(I) grants such motion; and

“(II) finds that the action of the attorney for the debtor in filing under this chapter violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure.

“(B) If the court finds that the attorney for the debtor violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, the court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with such procedures, may order—

“(i) the assessment of an appropriate civil penalty against the attorney for the debtor; and

“(ii) the payment of such civil penalty to the trustee, the United States trustee, or the bankruptcy administrator.

“(C) In the case of a petition, pleading, or written motion, the signature of an attorney shall constitute a certification that the attorney has—

“(i) performed a reasonable investigation into the circumstances that gave rise to the petition, pleading, or written motion; and

“(ii) determined that the petition, pleading, or written motion—

“(I) is well grounded in fact; and

“(II) is warranted by existing law or a good faith argument for the extension, modification, or reversal of existing law and does not constitute an abuse under paragraph (1).

“(D) The signature of an attorney on the petition shall constitute a certification that the attorney has no knowledge after an inquiry that the information in the schedules filed with such petition is incorrect.

“(5)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) and subject to paragraph (6), the court, on its own initiative or on the motion of a party in interest, in accordance with the procedures described in rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure, may award a debtor all reasonable costs (including reasonable attorneys' fees) in contesting a motion filed by a party in interest (other than a trustee, United States trustee, or bankruptcy administrator) under this subsection if—

"(i) the court does not grant the motion; and

"(ii) the court finds that—

"(I) the position of the party that filed the motion violated rule 9011 of the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure; or

"(II) the attorney (if any) who filed the motion did not comply with the requirements of clauses (i) and (ii) of paragraph (4)(C), and the motion was made solely for the purpose of coercing a debtor into waiving a right guaranteed to the debtor under this title.

"(B) A small business that has a claim of an aggregate amount less than $1,000 shall not be subject to subparagraph (A)(ii)(I).

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) the term 'small business' means an unincorporated business, partnership, corporation, association, or organization that—

"(I) has fewer than 25 full-time employees as determined on the date on which the motion is filed; and

"(II) is engaged in commercial or business activity; and

"(ii) the number of employees of a wholly owned subsidiary of a corporation includes the employees of—

"(I) a parent corporation; and

"(II) any other subsidiary corporation of the parent corporation.

"(6) Only the judge, United States trustee, or bankruptcy administrator may file a motion under section 707(b), if the current monthly income of the debtor, or in a joint case, the debtor and the debtor's spouse, as of the date of the order for relief, when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than—

"(A) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

"(B) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

"(C) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $525 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

"(7)(A) No judge, United States trustee, trustee, bankruptcy administrator, or other party in interest may file a motion under paragraph (2) if the current monthly income of the debtor and the debtor's spouse combined, as of the date of the order for relief when multiplied by 12, is equal to or less than—

"(i) in the case of a debtor in a household of 1 person, the median family income of the applicable State for 1 earner;

"(ii) in the case of a debtor in a household of 2, 3, or 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of the same number or fewer individuals; or

"(iii) in the case of a debtor in a household exceeding 4 individuals, the highest median family income of the applicable State for a family of 4 or fewer individuals, plus $525 per month for each individual in excess of 4.

"(B) In a case that is not a joint case, current monthly income of the debtor's spouse shall not be considered for purposes of subparagraph (A) if—

"(i)(I) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are separated under applicable nonbankruptcy law; or

"(II) the debtor and the debtor's spouse are living separate and apart, other than for the purpose of evading subparagraph (A); and

"(ii) the debtor files a statement under penalty of perjury—

"(I) specifying that the debtor meets the requirement of subclause (I) or (II) of clause (i); and

"(III) if the entity making the disclosure elects, to disclose the annual percentage rate under subclause (I) and the simple interest rate under subclause (II);

"(ii) if, at the time the petition is filed, the debt is an extension of credit other than under an open end credit plan, as the terms 'credit' and 'open end credit plan' are defined in section 103 of the Truth in Lending Act, then—

"(I) the annual percentage rate under section 128(a)(4) of the Truth in Lending Act, as disclosed to the debtor in the most recent disclosure statement given to the debtor prior to the reaffirmation agreement with respect to the debt, or, if no such disclosure statement was given to the debtor, the annual percentage rate as it would have been so disclosed at the time the disclosure statement is given to the debtor, or to the extent this annual percentage rate is not readily available or not applicable, then

"(II) the simple interest rate applicable to the amount reaffirmed as of the date the disclosure statement is given to the debtor, or if different simple interest rates apply to different balances, the simple interest rate applicable to each such balance, identifying the amount of such balance included in the amount reaffirmed, or

"(III) if the entity making the disclosure elects, to disclose the annual percentage rate under (I) and the simple interest rate under (II).

"(F) If the underlying debt transaction was disclosed as a variable rate transaction on the most recent disclosure given under the Truth in Lending Act, by stating 'The interest rate on your loan may be a variable interest rate which changes from time to time, so that the annual percentage rate disclosed here may be higher or lower.'.

"(G) If the debt is secured by a security interest which has not been waived in whole or in part or determined to be void by a final order of the court at the time of the disclosure, by disclosing that a security interest or lien in goods or property is asserted over some or all of the obligations the debtor is reaffirming and listing the items and their original purchase price that are subject to the asserted security interest, or if not a purchase-money security interest then listing by items or types and the original amount of the loan.

"(H) At the election of the creditor, a statement of the repayment schedule using 1 or a combination of the following—

"(i) by making the statement: 'Your first payment in the amount of $ is due on but the future payment amount may be different. Consult your reaffirmation or credit agreement, as applicable.', and stating the amount of the first payment and the due date of that payment in the places provided;

"(ii) by making the statement: 'Your payment schedule will be:', and describing the repayment schedule with the number, amount and due dates or period of payments scheduled to repay the obligations reaffirmed to the extent then known by the disclosing party; or

"(iii) by describing the debtor's repayment obligations with reasonable specificity to the extent then known by the disclosing party.

"(I) The following statement: 'Note: When this disclosure refers to what a creditor "may" do, it does not use the word "may" to give the creditor specific permission. The word "may" is used to tell you what might occur if the law permits the creditor to take the action. If you have questions about your reaffirmation or what the law requires, talk to the attorney who helped you negotiate this agreement. If you don't have an attorney helping you, the judge will explain the effect of your reaffirmation when the reaffirmation hearing is held.'.

"(J)(i) The following additional statements:

"'Reaffirming a debt is a serious financial decision. The law requires you to take certain steps to make sure the decision is in your best interest. If these steps are not completed, the reaffirmation agreement is not effective, even though you have signed it.

"'1. Read the disclosures in this Part A carefully. Consider the decision to reaffirm carefully. Then, if you want to reaffirm, sign the reaffirmation agreement in Part B (or you may use a separate agreement you and your creditor agree on).

"'2. Complete and sign Part D and be sure you can afford to make the payments you are agreeing to make and have received a copy of the disclosure statement and a completed and signed reaffirmation agreement.

"'3. If you were represented by an attorney during the negotiation of the reaffirmation agreement, the attorney must have signed the certification in Part C.

"'4. If you were not represented by an attorney during the negotiation of the reaffirmation agreement, you must have completed and signed Part E.

"'5. The original of this disclosure must be filed with the court by you or your creditor. If a separate reaffirmation agreement (other than the one in Part B) has been signed, it must be attached.

"'6. If you were represented by an attorney during the negotiation of the reaffirmation agreement, your reaffirmation agreement becomes effective upon filing with the court unless the reaffirmation is presumed to be an undue hardship as explained in Part D.

"'7. If you were not represented by an attorney during the negotiation of the reaffirmation agreement, it will not be effective unless the court approves it. The court will notify you of the hearing on your reaffirmation agreement. You must attend this hearing in bankruptcy court where the judge will review your agreement. The bankruptcy court must approve the agreement as consistent with your best interests, except that no court approval is required if the agreement is for a consumer debt secured by a mortgage, deed of trust, security deed or other lien on your real property, like your home.

"'Your right to rescind a reaffirmation. You may rescind (cancel) your reaffirmation at any time before the bankruptcy court enters a discharge order or within 60 days after the agreement is filed with the court, whichever is longer. To rescind or cancel, you must notify the creditor that the agreement is canceled.

"'What are your obligations if you reaffirm the debt? A reaffirmed debt remains your personal legal obligation. It is not discharged in your bankruptcy. That means that if you default on your reaffirmed debt after your bankruptcy is over, your creditor may be able to take your property or your wages. Otherwise, your obligations will be determined by the reaffirmation agreement which may have changed the terms of the original agreement. For example, if you are reaffirming an open end credit agreement, the creditor may be permitted by that agreement or applicable law to change the terms of the agreement in the future under certain conditions.

"'Are you required to enter into a reaffirmation agreement by any law? No, you are not required to reaffirm a debt by any law. Only agree to reaffirm a debt if it is in your best interest. Be sure you can afford the payments you agree to make.

"'What if your creditor has a security interest or lien? Your bankruptcy discharge does not eliminate any lien on your property. A "lien" is often referred to as a security interest, deed of trust, mortgage or security deed. Even if you do not reaffirm and your personal liability on the debt is discharged, because of the lien your creditor may still have the right to take the security property if you do not pay the debt or default on it. If the lien is on an item of personal property that is exempt under your State's law or that the trustee has abandoned, you may be able to redeem the item rather than reaffirm the debt. To redeem, you make a single payment to the creditor equal to the current value of the security property, as agreed by the parties or determined by the court.'.

"(ii) In the case of a reaffirmation under subsection (m)(2), numbered paragraph 6 in the disclosures required by clause (i) of this subparagraph shall read as follows:

"'6. If you were represented by an attorney during the negotiation of the reaffirmation agreement, your reaffirmation agreement becomes effective upon filing with the court.'.

"(4) The form of reaffirmation agreement required under this paragraph shall consist of the following:

"'Part B: Reaffirmation Agreement. I/we agree to reaffirm the obligations arising under the credit agreement described below.

"'Brief description of credit agreement:

"'Description of any changes to the credit agreement made as part of this reaffirmation agreement:

"'Signature: Date:

"'Borrower:

"'Co-borrower, if also reaffirming:

"'Accepted by creditor:

"'Date of creditor acceptance:'.

"(5)(A) The declaration shall consist of the following:

"'Part C: Certification by Debtor's Attorney (If Any).

"'I hereby certify that (1) this agreement represents a fully informed and voluntary agreement by the debtor(s); (2) this agreement does not impose an undue hardship on the debtor or any dependent of the debtor; and (3) I have fully advised the debtor of the legal effect and consequences of this agreement and any default under this agreement.

"'Signature of Debtor's Attorney: Date:'.

"(B) In the case of reaffirmations in which a presumption of undue hardship has been established, the certification shall state that in the opinion of the attorney, the debtor is able to make the payment.

"(C) In the case of a reaffirmation agreement under subsection (m)(2), subparagraph (B) is not applicable.

"(6)(A) The statement in support of reaffirmation agreement, which the debtor shall sign and date prior to filing with the court, shall consist of the following:

"'Part D: Debtor's Statement in Support of Reaffirmation Agreement.

"'1. I believe this agreement will not impose an undue hardship on my dependents or me. I can afford to make the payments on the reaffirmed debt because my monthly income (take home pay plus any other income received) is $, and my actual current monthly expenses including monthly payments on post-bankruptcy debt and other reaffirmation agreements total $, leaving $ to make the required payments on this reaffirmed debt. I understand that if my income less my monthly expenses does not leave enough to make the payments, this reaffirmation agreement is presumed to be an undue hardship on me and must be reviewed by the court. However, this presumption may be overcome if I explain to the satisfaction of the court how I can afford to make the payments here: .

"'2. I received a copy of the Reaffirmation Disclosure Statement in Part A and a completed and signed reaffirmation agreement.'.

"(B) Where the debtor is represented by an attorney and is reaffirming a debt owed to a creditor defined in section 19(b)(1)(A)(iv) of the Federal Reserve Act, the statement of support of the reaffirmation agreement, which the debtor shall sign and date prior to filing with the court, shall consist of the following:

"'I believe this agreement is in my financial interest. I can afford to make the payments on the reaffirmed debt. I received a copy of the Reaffirmation Disclosure Statement in Part A and a completed and signed reaffirmation agreement.'.

"(7) The motion, which may be used if approval of the agreement by the court is required in order for it to be effective and shall be signed and dated by the moving party, shall consist of the following:

"'Part E: Motion for Court Approval (To be completed only where debtor is not represented by an attorney.). I (we), the debtor, affirm the following to be true and correct:

"'I am not represented by an attorney in connection with this reaffirmation agreement.

"'I believe this agreement is in my best interest based on the income and expenses I have disclosed in my Statement in Support of this reaffirmation agreement above, and because (provide any additional relevant reasons the court should consider):

"'Therefore, I ask the court for an order approving this reaffirmation agreement.'.

"(8) The court order, which may be used to approve a reaffirmation, shall consist of the following:

"'Court Order: The court grants the debtor's motion and approves the reaffirmation agreement described above.'.

"(l) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title the following shall apply:

"(1) A creditor may accept payments from a debtor before and after the filing of a reaffirmation agreement with the court.

"(2) A creditor may accept payments from a debtor under a reaffirmation agreement which the creditor believes in good faith to be effective.

"(3) The requirements of subsections (c)(2) and (k) shall be satisfied if disclosures required under those subsections are given in good faith.

"(m)(1) Until 60 days after a reaffirmation agreement is filed with the court (or such additional period as the court, after notice and a hearing and for cause, orders before the expiration of such period), it shall be presumed that the reaffirmation agreement is an undue hardship on the debtor if the debtor's monthly income less the debtor's monthly expenses as shown on the debtor's completed and signed statement in support of the reaffirmation agreement required under subsection (k)(6)(A) is less than the scheduled payments on the reaffirmed debt. This presumption shall be reviewed by the court. The presumption may be rebutted in writing by the debtor if the statement includes an explanation which identifies additional sources of funds to make the payments as agreed upon under the terms of the reaffirmation agreement. If the presumption is not rebutted to the satisfaction of the court, the court may disapprove the agreement. No agreement shall be disapproved without notice and a hearing to the debtor and creditor and such hearing shall be concluded before the entry of the debtor's discharge.

"(2) This subsection does not apply to reaffirmation agreements where the creditor is a credit union, as defined in section 19(b)(1)(A)(iv) of the Federal Reserve Act.".

"§ 527. Disclosures

"(a) A debt relief agency providing bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person shall provide—

"(1) the written notice required under section 342(b)(1) of this title; and

"(2) to the extent not covered in the written notice described in paragraph (1), and not later than 3 business days after the first date on which a debt relief agency first offers to provide any bankruptcy assistance services to an assisted person, a clear and conspicuous written notice advising assisted persons that—

"(A) all information that the assisted person is required to provide with a petition and thereafter during a case under this title is required to be complete, accurate, and truthful;

"(B) all assets and all liabilities are required to be completely and accurately disclosed in the documents filed to commence the case, and the replacement value of each asset as defined in section 506 of this title must be stated in those documents where requested after reasonable inquiry to establish such value;

"(C) current monthly income, the amounts specified in section 707(b)(2), and, in a case under chapter 13, disposable income (determined in accordance with section 707(b)(2), are required to be stated after reasonable inquiry; and

"(D) information that an assisted person provides during their case may be audited pursuant to this title, and that failure to provide such information may result in dismissal of the case under this title or other sanction including, in some instances, criminal sanctions.

"(b) A debt relief agency providing bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person shall provide each assisted person at the same time as the notices required under subsection (a)(1) with the following statement, to the extent applicable, or one substantially similar. The statement shall be clear and conspicuous and shall be in a single document separate from other documents or notices provided to the assisted person:

"'IMPORTANT INFORMATION ABOUT BANKRUPTCY ASSISTANCE SERVICES FROM AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER.

"'If you decide to seek bankruptcy relief, you can represent yourself, you can hire an attorney to represent you, or you can get help in some localities from a bankruptcy petition preparer who is not an attorney. THE LAW REQUIRES AN ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER TO GIVE YOU A WRITTEN CONTRACT SPECIFYING WHAT THE ATTORNEY OR BANKRUPTCY PETITION PREPARER WILL DO FOR YOU AND HOW MUCH IT WILL COST. Ask to see the contract before you hire anyone.

"'The following information helps you understand what must be done in a routine bankruptcy case to help you evaluate how much service you need. Although bankruptcy can be complex, many cases are routine.

"'Before filing a bankruptcy case, either you or your attorney should analyze your eligibility for different forms of debt relief made available by the Bankruptcy Code and which form of relief is most likely to be beneficial for you. Be sure you understand the relief you can obtain and its limitations. To file a bankruptcy case, documents called a Petition, Schedules and Statement of Financial Affairs, as well as in some cases a Statement of Intention need to be prepared correctly and filed with the bankruptcy court. You will have to pay a filing fee to the bankruptcy court. Once your case starts, you will have to attend the required first meeting of creditors where you may be questioned by a court official called a 'trustee' and by creditors.

"'If you choose to file a chapter 7 case, you may be asked by a creditor to reaffirm a debt. You may want help deciding whether to do so and a creditor is not permitted to coerce you into reaffirming your debts.

"'If you choose to file a chapter 13 case in which you repay your creditors what you can afford over 3 to 5 years, you may also want help with preparing your chapter 13 plan and with the confirmation hearing on your plan which will be before a bankruptcy judge.

"'If you select another type of relief under the Bankruptcy Code other than chapter 7 or chapter 13, you will want to find out what needs to be done from someone familiar with that type of relief.

"'Your bankruptcy case may also involve litigation. You are generally permitted to represent yourself in litigation in bankruptcy court, but only attorneys, not bankruptcy petition preparers, can give you legal advice.'.

"(c) Except to the extent the debt relief agency provides the required information itself after reasonably diligent inquiry of the assisted person or others so as to obtain such information reasonably accurately for inclusion on the petition, schedules or statement of financial affairs, a debt relief agency providing bankruptcy assistance to an assisted person, to the extent permitted by nonbankruptcy law, shall provide each assisted person at the time required for the notice required under subsection (a)(1) reasonably sufficient information (which shall be provided in a clear and conspicuous writing) to the assisted person on how to provide all the information the assisted person is required to provide under this title pursuant to section 521, including—

"(1) how to value assets at replacement value, determine current monthly income, the amounts specified in section 707(b)(2) and, in a chapter 13 case, how to determine disposable income in accordance with section 707(b)(2) and related calculations;

"(2) how to complete the list of creditors, including how to determine what amount is owed and what address for the creditor should be shown; and

"(3) how to determine what property is exempt and how to value exempt property at replacement value as defined in section 506 of this title.

"(d) A debt relief agency shall maintain a copy of the notices required under subsection (a) of this section for 2 years after the date on which the notice is given the assisted person.".
